School Strike Is Called Off; Mothers Gain Major Point

Complete Overhauling of Blair's Heating Plant Ordered.

Irate Parents Face 2 Commissioners

50-Year-Old Furnace Behaves on Warm, Balmy Day.

Like the precocious child who refuses to show off when company comes, Blair School's widely denounced furnace failed to exhibit its nefarious aspects yesterday for Commissioners Hazen and Sultan but, nevertheless, strike-threatening mothers won a promise that it will be overhauled at once.

The promise averted the strike of grade school children which had been called by the Blair-Hayes Parent-Teacher Association.

For more than an hour the two District heads went from pipe to pipe and register to register, sniffing and tapping. Every so often they would interrupt their inspection tour to hold a whispered council, huddle fashion, or to face a group of complaining mothers.

Accompanying them were Dr. Joseph A. Murphy, of the Health Department; a laboratory assistant, and W. A. Draper, engineer in charge of the municipal repair shop.

Met by Irate Mothers.

The visitors entered the 50-year-old brick school near Seventh and I streets northeast about 11 a. m. to face some 25 or 30 excited parents milling about in the main hall. Col. Sultan made himself as inconspicuous as possible. Mr. Hazen, visibly abashed by the display, took the center of the floor and announced:

"We're your Commissioners and we want to do what's best. We can close——"

At this point a classroom of second-graders broke forth into song, engulfing the speaker's softly spoken zeginning. The classroom door was closed and he resumed.

"We can close the school for 30 days while a new heating plant is put in or we can wait till summer."

Face Severe Questioning.

Several angry cries of "No! No!" greeted his mere mention of waiting until summer before replacing the aged furnace, which the organized mothers accuse of endangering their children's health by giving off soot and noxious fumes.

Mrs. Edwin Green, militant leader of the parent-teacher group, then unloosed a barrage of questions against the chairman of the Board of Commissioners, who by that time was completely hemmed in by irate women.

"We've waited since 1926. How long before we get action?"

"Why hasn't the District kept previous promises?"

Bank Contests Libby's Claims

Challenges the Validity of Reynolds' Divorce in Fight on Estate.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Nov. 19 (AP).—The validity of the late Smith Reynolds' divorce at Reno and his subsequent marriage to Libby Holman, Broadway singer, was challenged by the Cabarrus Bank & Trust Co., coguardian for the dead tobacco heir's daughter by his first wife, in Superior Court here today.

The bank's action was taken in its response to a plea filed last week in behalf of Christopher Smith Reynolds, infant son of the tobacco heir and Miss Holman, which made a claim to the entire estate of young Reynolds, estimated at $25,000,000.

Anne Cannon Reynolds 2d, 4-year-old daughter of the tobacco heir who died of a pistol wound here more than two years ago, is entitled to at least half of her father's estate, the bank's response asserted, and unless Baby Christopher "shall be able to prove that he is the legitimate child of the said Smith Reynolds, then the said Anne Cannon Reynolds 2d, his sole surviving child, is entitled to the whole estate," except the personal property.

If Miss Holman's child "can establish the validity of the divorce and that the subsequent marriage was legal, then Christopher Smith Reynolds is entitled to an equal share," the response continued.

Simultaneously, the bank filed a response to the offer of settlement made last week by the brother and sisters of young Reynolds, which was termed "fair, just and equitable."

Two Slain in Street Fight.

Sion, Switzerland, Nov. 19 (AP).—Two persons were killed and two wounded today in a street battle between political groups. The hostilities began with stones as missiles, but soon someone started shooting. Police dispersed the fighters and arrested two.

"We Want to Do What's Best, But—"

In this fashion did Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen meet the threats and protests of infuriated mothers yesterday when he went to Blair School to see personally what could be done about the heating plant. His promise that the equipment will be given a thorough overhauling at once prevented, at least for the time being, the threatened strike.

Plea to Court Made for 900 Facing Ouster

Morganthau Must Answer Action to Enjoin Dismissals.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., was ordered yesterday by Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of the District Supreme Court, to show cause why he should not be enjoined from discharging 900 employes of the alcohol tax unit of his department.

These 900 employes are among 1,400 who were affected by a "patronage rider" tacked on to an appropriation bill in the last Congress by Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee. The rider forced the employes to take a Civil Service examination, and 900 either failed in it or refused to take it.

The suit which led to Chief Justice Wheat's order yesterday was filed by Attorneys Samuel T. Ansell and Edward S. Briley in the name of Paul Sarlo, a Brooklyn employe of the alcohol tax unit, who, like so many of his colleagues, faces dismissal December 1.

The attorneys asked the court to permit all employes "similarly situated" to become parties to the suit.

Returnable Monday.

Chief Justice Wheat, who heard the attorneys briefly outline their case, fixed Monday as the time when the Treasury Secretary must show cause or be enjoined from discharging all employes who did not pass a recent examination. Sarlo refused to take the examination because, he explained, he had taken a competitive test when he entered the service and had a genuine civil service rating.

Asserting that Senator McKeller precipitated the formation of the "patronage rider" because he was under the impression the employes had been taken into the service "without any real civil service examination; that practically all of them belonged to one political party; and that the method of their appointment was contrary" to the spirit of the civil service law, Sarlo contended the "rider" was in direct conflict with ordinary civil service procedure.

As a result of these incorrect beliefs, he said, a rider was attached to the emergency appropriations act last June. The rider provided "that no employe who was appointed between June 10, 1933, and December 31, 1933," should be retained on the rolls after December 1, 1934. Those dates were taken

Monument's Site Gauged By Scientists

With a powerful electric light, which can project its beams 30 miles, four scientists from the Coast and Geodetic Survey worked atop the Washington Monument last night, compiling data which will determine the exact location in longitude and latitude of the famous obelisk.

As thousands of people in the streets observed the light, and wondered the reason for it, the men on the monument cooperated with seven other stations in and near the District, where similar crews measured and checked with them by means of similar lights.

For half a century the location of the monument has been known approximately, but because it was impossible to conduct observations on top the towering structure, exact mathematical calculation was impossible.

Scientists Climb to Top.

But yesterday afternoon, armed with the electric light, which is equipped with six dry-cell batteries and a parabolic reflector, the scientists climbed, by means of the steel scaffold and special ladders, to the top of the monument, where they installed and tested their equipment.

They were in charge of Lieut. John Bowie, jr., of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Lieut. Bowie's crew consisted of Samuel P. Hand, observer; W. T. Therrill, recorder, and D. E. Bell, light keeper.

As soon as darkness fell over Washington, the first glow of the light was visible.

At the same time the beam flashed steadily from the Monument, lights glowed at seven points, where similar observations were being made.

These were the Arlington Wire Towers, the Naval Observatory, Chevy Chase, the Soldiers' Home,

Death Penalty Asked For Man in Dual Murder

Mrs. Aurelia Puryear and her daughter, aged 8, were slain on May 2, 1933, in the Puryear home. A few minutes later Will Jamison, colored, was fatally wounded. Puryear testified the Negro killed his wife and daughter and that he, in turn, shot the man.

Borah Insists Congress Sift Relief 'Waste'

Senator Says Millions Go for Administration of Funds for Needy.

(Associated Press.)

New charges of waste amounting to millions of dollars were aimed at the Relief Administration last night by Senator Borah of Idaho.

In a radio address, the veteran Republican independent boomed a demand for an investigation by a "wholly disinterested committee or tribunal." Asked what he meant by that, he said: "Congress."

Borah urged that the Administration wrap additional safeguards against waste around the huge relief program contemplated for the next year.

Huge Costs Are Charged.

In one Western county, he asserted, he had a report that $4 had been disseminated in relief but that the cost of administration had been $572. In another county it cost $576, he said, and the amount administered was $6.

"The relief problem will be with us for a long time," he asserted. "It is going to take not only millions, but it will run into billions. Every dollar saved in administration means food and shelter for the needy and the unhoused.

"Before we start upon a new program, there ought to be a thorough, searching and dispassionate investigation by disinterested parties, not only as to things past but as how best to deal with the matter in the future. With the cost and expense now being incurred, there is going to be a breakdown."

Gives Details of "Waste."

Evidently replying to the claim of Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, that he had supplied no specific evidence of "shameful waste" to a FERA investigator who conferred with him last week, Borah said nothing had occurred

Gold Act Test Set for Jan. 8 Under Ruling Of High Court

$100,000,000,000 Sum Is Involved in Contest of New Deal Law.

Cummings Ready To Argue U.S. Side

Four Cases Involving Government Action Due for Hearing.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Arguments regarding the validity of New Deal gold legislation, affecting investments and contracts with a face value of approximately $100,000,000,000, will be heard by the Supreme Court on January 3, under an order handed down by that tribunal yesterday.

On motion of J. Crawford Biggs, Solicitor General, the court yesterday set down for hearing on that day three so-called "gold clause" cases and one challenging the authority of the Federal Government to seize gold currency certificates without paying for them in gold or its equivalent in other currency.

Vital Issue at Stake.

Invalidation of no other New Deal act or group of statutes would have the far-reaching repercussions that a decision declaring unconstitutional the resolution abrogating clauses in public and private contracts requiring payment in gold, or the act authorizing the President to seize all gold and gold certificates in the country in exchange for their face value in other currency.

It has been estimated that the gold clause appears in $22,000,000,000 of Government obligations and in more than $75,000,000,000 worth of other contracts, chiefly railroad, public utility, real estate and similar bonds. Should the Supreme Court rule that such obligations must be settled for the equivalent of gold of the weight and fineness existing at the time the contracts were made, this indebtedness would be increased approximately 63 per cent on the basis of the present value of the gold dollar.

Cummings to Argue Case.

Consequently the possibility exists that the Supreme Court decision on the New Deal gold legislation may be the most momentous and far-reaching of any opinion handed down by that tribunal in this generation. For that reason the Government is leaving no stone unturned in its preparation of the cases and Attorney General Homer S. Cummings will head the battery of counsel that will uphold the validity of the statutes.

With the arguments scheduled for January 8, the court is expected to hand down decisions the latter part of January or the first of February.

The cases marked down for hearing on that date include the suit of Norman C. Norman, of New York, against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the RFC and others against the Bankers Trust Co., of New York and William H. Bixby, trustee of holders of first mortgage bonds of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad; John M. Perry against the Treasury, and F. Eugene Nortz against the Treasury.

The Norman case involves the interest on a $1,000 Baltimore & Ohio

Police Hide Prisoners In Murder of 2 Girls; Home of One Burned

Roanoke Officers Spirit Accused Man and Three Others to Secret Destination as Public Indignation Rises After Finding of Bodies.

Clifton Forge, Va., Nov. 19 (U.P.).—The home of Philip Jones, 25, colored, who confessed today to the murder of Alice B. Hill, 13, and her 6-year-old sister, Ellen, was destroyed by fire late tonight.

A guard left at Jones' house while he was taken away for safe-keeping by officers said he saw no one near the house.

Clifton Forge, Va., Nov. 19 (AP). The brutal slaying of two young white girls and attack upon one of them was confessed today, police said, by a 25-year-old colored man, Philip Jones, after the bodies had been found in a ravine near here.

The man's whereabouts was a closely guarded police secret tonight.

A searching party early today found the bodies of the girls—Alice B. Hill, 13, and her sister, Ellen, 9—near the Jones home about a mile and a half from Clifton Forge.

Jones, his wife, Chester Smith, jr., 23, and John Pryor, all colored, were hurried to Roanoke as news of the crime spread and public indignation rose.

Clifton Forge officers, first announced Jones had confessed slaying one of the girls, but accused Smith, who denied it, of killing the other.

Later announcement was made that Jones had made a full confession to the double slaying, and almost immediately two automobiles carrying heavily armed police guards sped from Roanoke, taking the four prisoners to a destination kept secret even from the accompanying officers, who left under sealed orders.

The Hill children, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Hill, of Clifton Forge, became objects of an organized search after they failed to return to their home last night. Sunday afternoon they had gone to the Jones home in response to a telephone request from the man that they tell his wife he would not be home until late.

The bodies were found together early this morning, both with their heads crushed. The older girl's hands were tied with fodder twine. Her body was covered with bruises, and Coroner Louis A. Houff said she had been attacked.

Under the Jones home, only 100 yards away, searchers found a shotgun with its stock broken and bloodstained. Jones, when arrested, was suffering from a gunshot wound in one leg below the knee which, he said, was inflicted accidentally.

Reserve Board And Advisers Bury Hatchet

No Peace Pledges Made, However, as Agencies Hold 'Love Feast.'

Discussing chiefly routine matters of credit and banking operations, the Federal Reserve Advisory Council yesterday had "a love feast" with the Federal Reserve Board, as one of the participants explained the first session of the council's two-day meeting here.

The rift between the Council and the reserve board, which occurred after the council's last meeting here, has been temporarily forgotten, even if it has not been forgiven, it was asserted. If the council issues any statement at the end of its session today it will not be hostile to Administration measures, it was stated further.

After its last meeting here in September the council, an agency created by law to advise the reserve board on monetary and credit matters, issued a statement assailing the Administration's fiscal policies and urging balancing of the budget and an ending of uncertainty over further currency moves. The board refused to accept the council's statement, contending it treated with matters outside the group's jurisdiction.

Whatever bad feeling was engendered by that incident had passed when the council met yesterday. The body had luncheon with the reserve board, now headed by Gov. Marriner S. Eccles. It was his first active day at the reserve board headquarters. While every-

U. S. Buys Large Cabbage Order for Sauerkraut Diet

Sauerkraut is to be added to the diet of families on relief rolls in a number of States, according to the Associated Press.

Disclosing the purchase by the Federal surplus relief corporation of 25,000 tons of surplus cabbage in New York State, relief officials expressed the hope that much of the cabbage would be made into sauerkraut by State relief administrations.

They want the product to pep up the winter diet of some of the relief families instead of it all being consumed at once.

NRA Foresees Drastic Drop In Idle Ranks

Durable Goods Industries and FHA Expected to Employ Millions.

NRA will seek to put a big dent in the army of the unemployed this winter, S. Clay Williams, new Blue Eagle board chairman, revealed yesterday.

The current offensive in the movement to take the jobless off the relief rolls, he said, is concentrated in the durable goods industries. He expects great momentum to be provided by the Federal housing campaign.

"We hope to have a great deal of new employment under the codes this winter," Williams explained at a press conference. "The best chance for improvement is in the durable goods industres, where there is a whole lot of existing void.

Looks to Housing Plans.

"I have more personal faith in the housing campaign than in any other line of activity. There is more possibility of real contributions to employment in the durable goods industries than anywhere else."

While he declined to be drawn out on the exact number of new jobs he expected to be provided in industry, he intimated he would not be satisfied unless the total ran into millions.

The administratvie board, Williams said, so far has not begun drafting recommendations for new

Commission Considers Details of Proposal by Company.

Order to Reduce Rates Was Fought

Firm's Appeal on Adverse Decision by Lower Court Pending.

Telephone users in the District yesterday were offered return of approximately $1,000,000 they have paid for service in the last two years and approximately a 10 per cent reduction in their telephone bills in the future.

The offer was made by the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. to the Public Utilities Commission. It was a concession by the company that it was not confident of victory in the District Court of Appeals from the District Supreme Court order sustaining the rate reduction order issued two years ago.

Since the commission issued the rate reduction order the company has continued to charge for service at the old rates. It has posted a bond to guarantee that all telephone users would be paid back the excess charges if the commission order was sustained in the courts. The excess charges by the company now amount to about $1,000,000. It will be more than that before the final details of the settlement are worked out.

Commission's Statement.

"The commission," it was said in a formal statement, "has not completed consideration of the matter. If a satisfactory conclusion is reached then the impounded fund of approximately $1,000,000 would be refunded as required by the court decree and rates established to absorb the reduction."

Final decision by the commission and William A. Roberts, people's counsel, to accept the capitulation of the company will depend to a large extent on how the company proposes to apply the contemplated rate reductions.

The reduction order of the commission was issued on October 10, 1932. It provided for a reduction of 10 per cent in the amount of telephone bills, except private branch exchanges. The company estimates the reduction would amount to $441,000 per year. Mr. Roberts has estimated the amount would reach $500,000 a year.

Phone Firm Appeals.

Immediately following issuance of the reduction order the telephone company appealed to the District Supreme Court. The utilities commission, then represented by Mr. Roberts as its counsel, won from the Supreme Court a decree sustaining the commission's order. From this decree the company appealed to the court of appeals. The appeal still is pending before that court. Under normal procedure it

Players Hurt In Car Crash

Mrs. Elizabeth Pritchard, F. X. Kilroy, Injured; Condition Serious.

Severely injured yesterday when their car collided with a truck, Mrs. Elizabeth Gatlin Pritchard, 25, leading lady and director of the Willard Roof Players, and Francis X. Kilroy, 22, scene designer and member of tre troup, were in serious condition at Walter Reed Hospital last night.

The accident happened at Blair road and New Hampshire avenue northwest. The driver of the truck, John W. Smith, 36, colored, of 1615 Marion street northwest, was held at the Sixth Precinct, pending investigation.

Mrs. Pritchard, who lives with her mother at 3010 Wisconsin avenue northwest, suffered a fractured skull and had an even chance to recover, according to attending physicians.

Kilroy received deep skull wounds and his condition was reported improved, although still dangerous. He lives at 1809 Massachusetts avenue southeast.

They were en route to produce a play called "Bootleg Babies" in Baltimore. Mr. Kilroy had designed the scenery and Mrs. Pritchard was to direct the production.

Mystery Veils Deaths Of 'Robinson Crusoes'

Letters Signed 'Margaret Wittman' Only Deepen Problem of Identifying Two Bodies Found on Lonely Isle in Archipelagoes.

Los Angeles, Nov. 19 (AP).—One of the little volcanic rocks of the Galapagos archipelago that Charles Darwin a century ago said offered clews as to how life first appeared on the earth, today holds a strange mystery of death.

A pole from which fluttered a distress signal, a little boat, a bundle of baby clothes and two human bodies, ravaged by the elements after a slow death by thirst and starvation, formed the unfinished story.

Dispatches from a tuna fishing clipper, the Santa Amaro, told this much. In addition they disclosed one of the bodies apparently was that of a large man, slightly bald. The smaller form was in such condition it could not be determined whether it was of a man or woman.

A packet of letters also was found, signed Margaret Wittman.

The lonely, waterless isle is known as Marchena and is 160 miles northeast of the old convict isle of Charles, which is near the Equator, 500 miles off the coast of Ecuador.

Nine persons are known to have been on Charles Island, including the Wittman woman.

They were Arthur, her husband, a 14-year-old son and a 2-year-old baby, the only white person known to have been born in this strange archipelago; Dr. Friederich Ritter, Berlin raw food exile, and his mate, Frau Dore Strauch Koerwien, also of Berlin, and the Baroness Eloise Bonsquet de Wagner, of Vienna, with two companions, Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, of Paris, and Robert Philipson.

All were self exiles seeking an island paradise.

Scientists here who know all of them said the only man who was slightly bald was Wittman.

The baroness, self-styled "empress" of the archipelago, and her two companions disappeared, after three years of sensational episodes on the island, in the middle of June. A letter written June 16 by Dr. Ritter came July 30 to Capt. G. Allan Hancock, patron of science and explorer, who each year takes a

Chest Must Raise $429,001 In Two Days to Reach Quota

With today and tomorrow to go and $429,001.21 needed to complete the goal of $1,675,000, Community Chest leaders last night decided that there will be no supplemental drive—whether or not the goal is reached tomorrow night.

The last report meeting of the drive will be held at 7:45 p. m. tomorrow, H. L. Rust, jr., campaign chairman, said. He urged all donors to make their contributions in these two days, because gifts made later will deprive the 6,000 Chest workers of credit in the great drive.

The sum listed at yesterday's luncheon report meeting was $126,120.22, the smallest day's report made since the campaign began last Monday. This added to the previous amount gives the Chest a total of $1,245,998.79.

Again the Governmental Unit, headed by Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, reported the largest amount, $52,500. This gives this unit 92.42 per cent of its quota. Many more divisions were added to the "hundred per cent" list when Gen. Coleman read his report.

In urging on the army of workers for the last two days, Mr. Rust pointed out that every minute counts if the drive is to go over the top by its deadline. Success, he said, will require "faster, more thorough and more concentrated work by every volunteer."

At noon today, Mr. Rust said, the entire city will be thrown wide open for the solicitors. This means that the groupings, which have divided prospects into four divisions for the four major units of the drive, will be erased, and any worker may solicit any prospect.

Frank J. Hogan, last year's campaign chairman, added his words to those of Mr. Rust. Mr. Hogan said that he was thrilled with the

Drop a New White House Dish And Break a 1,000-Piece Set

For the first time in more than 20 years the White House is to get a new dinner service—1,000 pieces of ivory-colored china, bordered in dark blue and gold and bearing the President's crest.

The blue border of each piece will be studded with 48 gold stars and the gold band will be encrusted with motifs from the Roosevelt coat of arms.

Th china, which of course will be American-made, has been ordered by Mrs. Roosevelt through the Treasury Department, and will be paid for out of the White House appropriation. The successful bidder was William H. Plumer, of New York.

It is expected that the china will be ready for the first of the official White House entertainments late in December. Day and night shifts will be employed in the factory in an attempt to make this possible.

The china service will include 10 dozen each of large place plates, luncheon plates and bread and butter plates, coffee cups, tea cups and after-dinner coffee cups, soup cups and bouillon cups and plates. There will be no service platters or dishes, as the White House uses silver ones and those to match the gold service.

The President's crest is much like the seal of the United States except that the head of the eagle is turned in the other direction.

Those familiar with White House china consider Mrs. Roosevelt's selection a very good one because it will harmonize with other White House china now in use.

The last complete dinner service ordered at the White House was selected by the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and has formed the state

Private Trade Asked to Open 5,000,000 Jobs

Richberg Assures Leaders of Industry 'Inflation Orgy' Not Planned.

Atlanta, Nov. 19 (AP).—Industrial leaders of the Nation were assured tonight by Donald R. Richberg, recovery chieftain, that there would be "no orgy of inflation," and warned that private enterprise must find jobs for four or five million workers.

With an invitation from Joseph B. Ely, Governor of Massachusetts and a leader in the 1932 "stop Roosevelt" movement, to "take advantage of encouraging signs" still ringing in their ears, members of the Southeastern Development Board heard Richberg, speaking at a mass meeting here, stress the importance of continued cooperation and "faith in ourselves."

Gov. Ely spoke at a luncheon meeting of the development board, which was organized today "to sell the South to the Nation."

Six States Represented.

Governors, Senators and business leaders from six States were either present or represented at the organization and mass meetings. The States now taking active part in the board's work are Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

"It would be suicidal folly," Richberg said, "to abandon present mechanisms of cooperation and let Nature take its course." He reviewed "cooperative efforts"—such as NRA and AAA—and said:

"We must continue them, and we must improve them. There is no patent medicine that will cure our economic ills. But of all the quack remedies the worst that is offered to this Nation in the cold gray dawn of recovery from the intoxicated follies of 1929 is to get drunk again in another orgy of inflation."

Governor's Plea.

The Massachusetts Governor called upon the business men of America "to forget any apprehension and take advantage of encouraging signs," adding that he was "at first astounded that the American people were willing for the Government to take over matters hitherto privately controlled, yet I think that time has shown us there was some justification in doing something to stem the tide of radicalism."

In an interview, Gov. Ely warned against "too free" spending of money through relief and recovery agencies.

"To continue this for as long as two years more would bring inflation," he said, "and everyone knows that would mean disaster."

Plans for Advance.

In insisting that "business must do the job," Richberg said that a review of conditions would show that "the ground is now prepared for a great advance by private industry and trade."

"Then, just as rapidly as private enterprise reduces the load of unemployment," he promised, "we can achieve steady reductions in the volumn of governmental activities and expenditures.

"We must bring about the reemployment of four or five million workers in the near future, either through a great expansion of private enterprise or through future Government activities."

Governors and Governors-elect from the six States were invited to attend meetings here today and tomorrow.

After a luncheon tomorrow they will motor to Warm Springs to confer with President Roosevelt on means of developing the Southeast.

Governor-Elect's Daughter Menaced

Kidnap Note No Worry to Evageline Davey, 23.

Kent, Ohio, Nov. 19 (AP).—Despite a reported underworld plot to kidnap her, pretty Evangeline Davey, 23-year-old daughter of Governor-elect Martin L. Davey, sat in her home tonight, calmly asserting, "I'm not afraid."

A special escort of State highway patrolmen was assigned to guard her when she drove to Columbus Saturday to witness the Michigan-Ohio State football game.

Francis Poulson, chairman of the Ohio Democratic executive committee, said the "tip-off" came from a friend in Cincinnati, who had learned of the plot through underworld connections. The threat, Poulson said, was made "in order to force Davey to make certain appointments he would not ordinarily make."

Sea Hero Named To Head Steamer Inspection Body

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 19 (Spl.). Capt. George Fried, hero of numerous sea rescues, yesterday was appointed supervising head of the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce by President Roosevelt.

Capt. Fried recently retired from the United States Lines after serving as commander of the Manhattan, the Leviathan and the President Roosevelt. His frequent ocean rescues, including that of the crew of the Italian freighter Saturno, attracted international attention.

The post which Capt. Fried now fills was formerly occupied by John L. Crone, retired.

Capt. Fried's appointment was interpreted as a forerunner of more rigid safety regulations to be imposed on ocean vessels by the Government. The President has shown considerable interest in the Morro Castle disaster, which cost more than 100 lives last summer.

Politicians Turning Heat on HOLC Trying to Get Loans Before Money Goes.

CONSIDERABLE backfire has started since the Home Owners Loan Corporation announced it would receive no more applications for mortgage relief. HOLC has on hand about 1,000,000 applications still unacted upon. These would require about $3,000,000,000. But the corporation has only $1,200,000,000 left, and the Administration is opposed to asking for more funds, feeling that private capital can step in now and carry on.

That means Santa Claus won't leave anything in a lot of stockings that have been hung up at HOLC headquarters.

Already politicians are beginning to turn the heat on HOLC trying to get applications through for constituents before the money runs out. Those who don't get theirs in will be camping on the Capitol doorstep in January. Whether the Government will be able to stop or whether it will have to put up another $2,000,000,000 or so will depend in part upon how hard it is to get a mortgage loan through private channels at that time.

Building and loan associations and other lending institutions which have looked with disfavor upon Government competition in this field have been taken at their word by Chairman Fahey of HOLC, and he is ready to step aside for them.

The dean of the House—Representative Adolph J. Sabath, of Illinois—is having trouble since Speaker Rainey died.

He has served in the House since 1907, longer than any other member, 15 straight terms, and is now beginning his thirty-first year of answering quorum calls.

Any member who can hang on that long in the precarious game of politics eventually makes his way fairly near to the top in the House, where seniority counts for so much. Sabath became leader of the Illinois delegation, which is a fair-sized little legislature in itself.

That gave him considerable power. In addition, a good friend of his from Illinois—representative Henry T. Rainey—became Democratic leader of the House and then Speaker. During this period Sabath, through his close friendship with Rainey, came to exercise considerable undercover power.

Now Sabath's patron has gone and he is exposed to the shafts of other members of the Illinois delegation who are restive under his power. They are talking of shuffling him out of the delegation's leadership.

It isn't all personal. Sabath is a round-faced, jolly fellow who never feels badly at coming out second best in numerous sparring matches on the House floor, and he is reasonably popular personally. Part of the feeling arises out of the animosities between Chicago and down-State districts. Representative William W. Arnold, down-Stater, who is returning to Congress after having taken a vacation at the suggestion of his constituents, is mentioned as a possible successor to the Illinois leadership, as are Representative-at-Large Michael L. Igo and Representative McAndrews, both of Chicago.

Sabath has had hope of winning the speakership, but the trouble brewing inside his own delegation may smother whatever chance he had.

One of the main arguments advanced by the American Legion in behalf of immediate prepayment of adjusted compensation certificates is that it would stimulate business by pumping some $2,000,000,000 into circulation.

Against this theory, however, stands the experience of the Government after voting in 1931, to loan veterans up to 50 per cent of the value of their certificates. After a study of the loans made and the use to which the money was put, the Veterans' Bureau reported:

"It was expected that distribution of funds to be obtained through loans under the amendment would appreciably improve business conditions. This study reveals that a large portion of the funds obtained were used by the veterans to liquidate indebtedness previously incurred rather than placed in trade channels which would stimulate business. This fact, it is believed, may be considered as one of the primary reasons why the release of such funds did not stimulate business activities to the degree which might have been reasonably expected."

In other words, most of the money the Government loaned out went straight into the banks.

Legion officials, however, have an explanation which puts a slightly different light on the situation. They say that a large proportion of those who borrowed were unemployed and in dire need, and that if payment now were to be limited to veterans on relief rolls, as is being urged by many as a compromise measure, the result would be similarly disappointing in its effect on business. No appreciably new buying power would be created, it is argued. However, they say, if payment were to be made to all, then considerable buying power would develop.

From this it is indicated that the Legion's executive committee, about to meet in Indianapolis to draft its recommendations to Congress, will oppose restriction of payment to those on the relief rolls and will hold out for complete redemption of all bonus certificates.

State relief officials who have been having trouble obtaining relief money from Harry Hopkins of FERA tried a new one on him recently. When thei telegrams went unanswered, they would ask the telegraph companies to insist on an answer. It was easy to turn off these followups when they came to FERA offices.

But one night Hopkins was sound asleep when the telephone rang. It was a cheery-voiced girl at the telegraph office.

"Mr. Hopkins," she said sweetly, "the party in Wyoming is asking if you have answered his telegram yet."

Governor-elect James M. Curley has been in town trying to interest Public Works Administrator Ickes in a plan for free house lots for jobless workers in Massachusetts. He suggests that the State and municipalities turn over unused publicly-owned land for housing developments. That, Curley feels, would wipe out the land speculators at one swoop.

Houses would be built with Federal funds and sold at cost on 20-year payment plans.

Secretary Ickes listened with interest but explained that he has run out of money. If he obtains more funds from Congress, Curley will be back.

Court Orders 'Show Cause' In Job Ouster

Morgenthau Must Answer Suit Monday; Affects 900 Employes.

because there was considerable shifting of the old Prohibition Bureau between the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department, each shift bringing with it a temporary separation from a "permanent" appointment.

Sarlo contended that two opinions of the Attorney General relative to the construction and legality of the "rider" were inconsistent, while a third opinion, rendered by Comptroller General J. Raymond McCarl, was inconsistent with both.

"Vain Appeals" Made.

Vain appeals have been made to the Treasury Department, it was said. These appeals were met with a statement by Morgenthau that he would do everything legally possible to retain the older employes of the Alcohol Unit now working in his department. Despite this assurance, letters went out this month notifying all persons who did not pass the recent examination that their services would be terminated December 1.

Congress never intended that permanent Civil Service employes, those who took bona fide examinations, should be discharged, Sarlo contended. He asked that, in view of the debates preceding adoption of the rider, which showed a mistaken conception of the situation, an order be passed that would first temporarily bar the dismissals, and after a full hearing permanently enjoin them.

Blair Strike Off; Mothers Win Point

"Do we get a new furnace right away or don't we?"

Mr. Hazen answered the best he could, determinedly repeating that it would be impractical to shut down the school for a month to replace the berated furnace, and then he beat a retreat to the basement.

Fairly bristling, Mrs. Green mounted the staircase and demanded a strike vote. Ten or twelve hands went up. Included among the "fors" was a street car conductor, his little son clinging to him. He was the only father in the group, but he did not appear self-conscious.

"Get your children," Mrs. Green ordered.

Strike Thought On.

A buxom mother went up the steps. She was followed by a few more. Others stood back uncertainly, exchanging opinions as to whether they could be prosecuted for taking and keeping pupils from class. Earlier, soon after the school day had opened, a few mothers had brought their children and then taken them home again in the belief the strike was a certainty.

A number of youngsters, wondering what it was all about, were plucked from their desks at Mrs. Green's command but few if any left the building. The P.-T. A. head snatched her 8-year-old son, Donald, and then stood by for developments.

Meantime the Commissioners and their technical advisers were inspecting the furnace and its connections. Several women followed them into the basement. The officials had a police guard consisting of one lieutenant, one sergeant and two privates.

The air within the building was distressingly good. Ordinarily, to quote the protestants, it is thick with soot and saturated with dangerous coal gas. But yesterday, due partly if not entirely to the fact that balmy weather reduced the burden on the heating plant and permitted the opening of all windows, the atmosphere was clear and odorless.

"Discouraging Result."

Even the blowers proved traitorous. At other times they have fanned clouds of dust out of the hot air registers; yesterday, when they were turned on, a thin, negligible film was the discouraging result.

Ringing of the noontime lunch bell found the Commissioners still in the basement. The building had been emptied of all children except those hanging onto embattled mothers when Col. Sultan, Mr. Hazen and the inspectors left their last and decisive huddle to face Mrs. Green and her lieutenants.

"Starting tomorrow morning, work will begin on giving the furnace a complete overhauling," announced Commissioner Hazen. "And after all the leaks are fixed the health office will give this school special attention. Any time you have any complaint, let him know and he'll be out."

"Well, the strike is postponed," replied the Parent-Teacher president. "But understand, it isn't called off."

Repairs to Start.

So, this morning workmen will start the repair job. Draper said leaks in the smoke pipes will be sealed and the pipes cleaned and given a coat of asbestos. The air chambers also will be cleaned, he declared. In his opinion, the work won't take more than a few days and will not interfere with classroom studies.

Further repairs can be made, Draper said, during the Thanksgiving recess. Also, negotiations will open immediately to have the flues cleaned. This work must be done by private contract, he said, because the District does not have necessary equipment.

legislation to take the place of NRA when the act expires next June.

"Personally," he said, "I hope the gains that have been made in wages and hours can be retained. Incidentally, it would be perfectly miraculous if the act were reenacted in its present form."

Silent on Price Fixing.

He declined to confirm reports that the board hoped to retreat from rigid price-fixing and production limitation provisions of existing codes.

The future of service codes, including cleaners and dyers and barber shops, Williams said, will be dealt with in a report to be made to the board within ten days by its own investigators. He intimated the wage and hour provisions of such pacts probably would be retained.

Williams emphasized his desire to obtain better enforcement.

"We're going to push compliance just as far as we can," he said.

King's Son to Have 2 'Best Men' When He Weds Marina Nov. 29

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—Officially there will be no best man at the glamorous royal wedding of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina November 29.

Contrary to the general belief that the Prince of Wales would officiate alone for his younger brother, it was learned tonight that both the prince and the Duke of York will act as his "supporters."

The duke will be married in naval uniform. He has chosen the hymns which are to be sung at the ceremony, and has approved a special anthem "Alleluia, Alleluia," the music for which was composed by Dr. Ernest Bullock, the abbey organist.

There will be two ceremonies, it has been decided, both of them replete with age-old religious ritual. The first will be the Church of England service at Westminster Abbey.

The second will be a Greek Orthodox service. This will take place immediately afterward in a private chapel at Buckingham Palace where King George and Queen Mary worship each Sunday while the royal court is in London.

More than 1,500 guests will witness the ceremony in the historic abbey. Only a few, possibly no more than 70, will attend the private ceremony at the palace.

Under royal precedence cabinet members, former cabinet members and members of the Diplomatic Corps, many of them in brilliant uniform, will be seated in choir stalls.

Prominent personages, both men and women, also handsomely costumed, will occupy seats in the transepts under plans worked out by the lord chamberlain, whose duty it is to make most of the arrangements.

Droughts Broken, Floods Coming, Says Navy Expert

San Francisco, Nov. 19 (AP).—Predicting the cycle of droughts is drawing to a close, Capt. Thomas J. J. See, professor of mathematics, United States Navy, forecasts an alternative cycle of storms and floods.

"I am confident," he said, however, "that 1936-36 and '37 will be good years and add to the comfort and relief of the whole world."

He bases his belief on the increase of sun spots, explaining floods depend on the spots, which chill the earth and act as rainmakers.

"Already the chief droughts are broken in the United States by abundant and general rains in the most afflicted areas of the Mississippi Valley," he said. "And in many sections the return of great floods is indicated, as by 9 inches of rain in Missouri since August; 16 inches of rain at Pensacola, Fla., in one day, under a tropical hurricane; 13 inches at Washington within a week, two recent typhoons at Manila, with water a foot deep in the streets, great floods and storms in China and floods at Los Angeles, on the west coast of Mexico and about Seattle."

Man Asks for Arrest As $3,000 Embezzler

New Orleans, Nov. 19 (AP).—Walking up to a policeman on a street here, a man who told police he was William J. Burke said he had embezzled about $3,000 from a steel company in Des Moines, Iowa, and wanted to be arrested.

Burke told officers when he surrendered last night that on November 2 he walked away with between $2,000 and $3,000. He is being held pending word from Des Moines.

U. S. Refuses Plea of Guilty In Job Threat

Prisoner Held for Hearing Nov. 27 in B. & O. Extortion Case.

Baltimore, Nov. 19 (AP).—Refusing to accept a plea of guilty which Walter E. Henry offered when arraigned today on extortion charges, United States Commissioner Louis J. Burger set the case involving an extortion threat against Daniel Willard, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad president, for hearing November 27.

Commissioner Burger noted a "not guilty" plea in the case, and set Henry's bail at $7,000. Henry appeared in the courtroom without counsel.

United States Attorney Bernard J. Flynn earlier said Department of Justice experts had found the handwriting of a threatening letter sent Willard to be identical with that of Henry, former B. & O. employe.

Jailed After Threat.

Henry, 52-year-old former master machinist, has been in jail since his arrest Saturday in connection with a letter threatening to kill four officials of the railroad unless they reemployed 1,500 men.

The text of the letter, dated October 17, 1934, was made public by Flynn. It follows:

"D. Willard President B. & O. R. R.

"Dear Sir:

"This is to notify you that are association has agreed that your employes has suffered just about enough as a result of your economy program, or the closing of the shops at frequent periods.

Demands Jobs for 1,500.

"We feel that at least 50 per cent of the shut-downs are unwarranted, and if continued, it is going to cost the lives of four of your official family, namely, Emerson, Galloway, Schriver and yourself.

"We suggest, therefore, that you put at least 1,500 men back to Mount Clare at once, and keep them at work all winter.

"There will be no further communication in this matter, we give you just one week, to comply with the above, after one week, we shall loose no time in placing all four of you in 'hell,' where you belong for the suffering you have forced upon your employes and families unnecessarily.

"Yours truly."

Henry was charged with using the mails with "the intent to extort from one D. Willard, a thing of value, to wit, employment for 1,500 men."

D. C. Phone Users Offered $1,000,000

probably would be heard some time next spring.

The latest move by the company means that the company is willing to let the Supreme Court decree stand without further challenge, if the commission will agree to a "satisfactory" basis of rate readjustments.

It is entirely unlikely that the commission will insist on a straight reduction of 10 per cent in service charges. Such a reduction would be impracticable, it is said. For example, a 10 per cent reduction in a $4.75 per month charge would be 47½ cents per month. It might be the commission would decide that neither 47 nor 48, nor even as much as 40 cents reduction was the proper reduction for that particular service.

Details of Plan.

Although the company has not formally disclosed details of its proposed capitulation, preliminary figures which have been submitted indicate, it is said, that the company contemplates offering more service for the same amount of money now charged.

That proposal is certain to meet with the determined opposition of Mr. Roberts. It also is expected to meet with opposition by members of the utilities commission, who have been more cautious in their discussions because of their semi-judicial character.

Mr. Roberts, it is believed, will insist that the ordinary household user of the telephone be given the benefit of a cash reduction in his service rates.

Roberts' Comment.

"If material reductions in telephone charges are permitted for the large mercantile users of telephones those reductions might very well reduce to insignificance the reductions in rates offered the ordinary telephone subscriber," Mr. Roberts said.

"Of course, such commercial rate reductions might work out to the advantage of the company very profitably. It would attract more business, for example. I do not mean to infer that anything the company has proposed is not entirely acceptable. I merely wish to point out, in response to questions, that there are important details involved."

Statistics have been filed by the company with the commission and the people's counsel showing the amount of business done in each classification of telephone service in the District. These figures now are under study. Their study is expected to occupy several days.

State Will Enter Action Over Hawk's Nest Dam

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—Attorney General Homer A. Holt said today he would file an intervening petition for the State in the suit by the Federal Government for an injunction to halt construction of the Hawk's Nest Dam in New River, Fayette County.

The attorney general said the State "naturally is interested in its water power resources," but declined to say anything further on the State's position in the action.

Determining Monument's Exact Location

the Commerce Building, the Capitol and St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Each of these lights was manned by a crew of three men, whose duties were similar to those of the men atop the Monument.

Results are Checked.

The men high above the city kept at their scientific observations until they had successfully checked their results with those of the other seven stations.

The final readings will be computed at Coast and Gedetic Survey headquarters, and thus the exact geographical position of the Washington Monument on the earth's surface determined.

For the past 50 years everyone has known where the Monument was in a general way, scientists explained yesterday. The thought that scientifically the location was not exact entered few minds.

But the question has puzzled the Geodetic Survey.

The process by which the location is being determined is known as triangulation—the determining of locations by distance and light angles. Several points in the District have been definitely located by this method.

thing was harmonious, there were no expressed pledges of cooperation or peace on either side, it was said.

The "love feast," begun earlier in the day, was continued last night, when Howard Bruce, retiring member of the council from the Fifth Reserve District, entertained at dinner at his home, Belmont, near Elkridge, Md., for members of the council and reserve board, Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the RFC, and several Baltimore financiers.

Mr. Bruce was a member of the committee of the council which drafted the statement two months ago criticizing Administration fiscal policies. He has served on the council three years. The fifth district, which includes Washington, Maryland and Virginia, has a rule that its representative on the council shall not serve longer than three years.

The council will meet again today and later will hold a joint meeting with the reserve board for an exchange of opinions. Gov. Eccles, who declined to make a statement regarding the council's meeting yesterday, said he might have something to say after the advisory body adjourns today.

Much of the council's time was spent, it was learned, in discussing the condition of banks and the credit situation, with particular reference to industrial loans. Opinions were expressed that the banking situation is in a sound condition and that credit is flowing agan.

408 Applications Approved.

The council learned that up to November 1 the Federal Reserve Banks unconditionally had approved 408 applications for loans under the Glass loans-for-industry act. The reserve banks' share in these loans totaled $17,415,000. In addition, the banks approved with conditions 231 other loans for a total of $9,628,000. Of the loans approved, $6,226,000 has been disbursed and $77,000 repaid. Commitments of the banks total $3,218,000.

Industrial loan advisory committees in the 12 districts had recommended approval for loans totaling about $35,000,000.

Borah Assails Relief 'Waste,' Urges Inquiry by Congress

to justify modification of his accusations.

Instead, he went into more detail regarding reports of "waste" which he said had poured into his office.

"The source of waste seems to come from administration in the field," he declared. "The administrative pay roll is enormous. Those in authority in different sections of the country, through pressure or desire, seem to place a wholly unnecessary number of persons on the administrative pay roll at salaries beyond what the service justifies, * * * and the cost of administration runs in some instances from 25 per cent to 50 per cent of the sum administered."

Earlier in the day, the Relief Administration had reported that in August 11.6 per cent of all relief expenditures went to pay administrative costs. September figures were not yet available.

Borah said:

Chicago Funds Vanished.

"This afternoon a gentleman whom I know well comes to me from out of one of the States presenting what seems conclusive proof that a million dollars is unaccounted for in that State, that in some way or other it has utterly disappeared."

While in the West this summer, he said, he received evidence tending to show a waste of from $2,500,000 to $3,500,000 of relief funds. Indictments returned in this instance since have been dismissed by the Government with the explanation that legal proof was lacking, Borah reported.

"I do not assume to criticize the dismissal," he continued. "I assume, of course, there was no evidence establishing crime or criminal intent. But I am now advised that no one has controverted the proposition, that this vast sum of money was actually wasted and squandered in ways that can not be justified."

Expenditures Bared.

He said a report, made by "a courageous official," had disclosed that for $5.47 expended for relief in one State, $2.68 was spent for administration.

"Taking 100 counties in the State, the report disclosed that the administrative costs in administering $4,700 was $5,100," he said.

"It is fair to say that some improvement has been made," he added.

In one Middle Western city of 200,000 population, he said, the central relief office has 806 administration employes whose salaries together with incidental expenses total $1,500,000 a year.

Big Pay Rolls Are Cited.

"In another city in the Middle West," he continued, "they have 1,506 administration employes in the central office, the salaries and incidental expenses amounting to about $2,000,000 a year. These two instances given are not exceptional.

"In a Southwestern State the administrator declared that the cost of administration was about 25 per cent of the fund administered, and further declared that this was modest compared with other States with which he was familiar. I contend that 25 per cent for administration is waste upon the face of it."

Borah asserted that all of the facts he mentioned, with one "possible exception," were known to the FERA in Washington.

"I do not charge that these matters have been brought to the personal attention of Mr. Hopkins," he said. "But the information is there and it is subject to his call."

Withholds Some Data.

He said other facts in his possession, which may not be known to relief officials, would not be presented by him "until I know what is the program with reference to the matters to which I have called attention."

He served notice that he did not intend to "remain silent" regarding relief outlays.

"It is an unpleasant duty, but there is no higher duty resting upon a public official than to give voice to the millions in distress who can not speak effectively for themselves," he said.

Borah called attention to records of the Red Cross, which he said showed an administrative expense of about 6½ per cent for relief work following the Mississippi flood of 1917 and the Florida and Puerto Rico hurricanes of 1928.

Test of Gold Act Set by High Court

gold bond, while the case instituted by the RFC involves determiantion of the payment of gold bonds of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad. The RFC has loaned large sums to the latter railroad.

These two cases originally were slated to be argued December 10, but the Solicitor General asked the court to delay the hearing until January 8, in order that arguments might be presented at the same time in the Perry and North cases, which came to the Supreme Court from the Court of Claims with a request for instructions. The court agreed to this arrangement.

Mr. Perry, owner of a $10,000 called Fourth Liberty bond, brought suit to collect the present gold equivalent of that sum, while Mr. Nortz, former owner of $106,300 in Treasury gold certificates—which he surrendered under the antigold hoarding orders, is seeking an additional sum representing the increment in the value of gold resulting from the devaluation acts.

Holds Brief Session.

The Supreme Court held only a brief session, recessing until December 3 to consider cases already argued. It issued orders in a number of cases, the most important constituting a refusal at this time to pass on the validity of the Schackno act of the New York Legislature, authorizing the State insurance superintendent to take steps to reorganize and rehabilitate mortgage guarantee companies.

The case came before the court on an appeal by Fannie Abrams and other holders of certificates of the New York Title & Mortgage Co. from a decision of the State Supreme Court upholding the validity of the act. The suit was dismissed for want of a substantial Federal question, the court holding that the actions of the State insurance superintendent in respect to the New York Title & Mortgage Co. had not yet progressed sufficiently to indicate any injury to the appellants.

The importance of the case is indicated by statements to the Supreme Court to the effect that under the Schackno act there are now in the hands of the insurance superintendent undergoing rehabilitation 18 companies with outstanding guarantees totaling $2,608,232,550.

Austrian Chief Publicly Flays Reich, Entente

Neighbors, Including Germany, Invited to Join Pact.

Rome, Nov. 19 (AP).—Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, of Austria, who conferred again this afternoon with Premier Mussolini, publicly delivered a vigorous denunciation of foreign circles which slander Austria's situation and her aims.

At the same time, however, he invited Austria's neighbors, including Germany, to join an Italo-Austro-Hungarian pact for the sake of economic and political peace in central Europe.

In both cases he was speaking directly of Germany and the Little Entente.

"Some circles," he said in an interview, "arrive at an evaluation of our policy which does not correspond to the facts.

Gross Calumny Charged.

"This evaluation places our intentions under suspicion. It arouses opposition toward Austria. This criticism—anything but objective—descends even to the grossest calumny. In this phenomenon I can not discover anything but a deplorable lack of understanding of what economic collaboration means.

"This false evaluation of Austrian policy, these attempts to turn it upside down at any cost, naturally create obstacles to an orderly development of events. It renders more difficult an economic rapprochement in the Danubian basin—in full contrast to the vital needs of all the peoples of this sector.

"This is greatly to be deplored. Nevertheless, it will not induce us to change the direction of our foreign policy, because we have been persuaded to this in response to the general needs of Europe."

The chancellor said the protocols of the League of Nations "reveal in the best way possible that Austria already collaborated in the economic and cultural field with all the states which feel the same need for reciprocal integration in intellectual and material matters.

Concealed Aims Denied.

"Behind these, our good disposition to participate in common efforts and to reanimate economic and cultural relations with other states, no political aims are hidden."

Previously the chancellor disclosed he had issued an invitation to Germany, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Rumania to join the Italo-Austro-Hungarian pact. He said Italy was not interfering in the internal affairs of Austria and "has never interpreted her relations with Austria in the sense of a protectorate."

An official communique issued tonight constituted another bid to Germany and other countries to join the pact. The communique said "it was confirmed in two conferences between Il Duce and Chancellor Schuschnigg that tripartite accords are not exclusive and may be extended to others."

As in previous announcements the communique insisted that those entering must recognize "the existing fundamental principle," meaning Austria's right to independence. The statement said the close understanding Italy had with Austria under Chancellor Dollfuss has continued since his death in its full import.

Soft Yellow Colors In Vogue This Fall

Yellow-painted walls will be a decided vogue this season, say interior decorators. Soft tones, such as corn yellow, sunflower yellow and chartreuse are popular, especially in badly lighted rooms.

Ceilings are often painted the same color as the walls. For upholstery and window curtains, blue, blue green and tones of brown are harmonious.

N. Y. Elevator Strike Delayed But May Be Called Today

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—After a tense day in Manhattan's skyscrapers the threatened walkout of elevator operators failed to materialize.

James J. Bambrick, president of the Building Service Employes International Local Union 23B, said the strike call, expected today, probably would not be issued until tomorrow. He said he was awaiting a survey by three agents to determine how many buildings would be affected.

The union leaders have moved uptown. Earlier in the month they called a walkout in the garment district. Now the world's three tallest buildings—Empire State, Chrysler and R. C. A.—are threatened.

As the union leaders, claiming 51,000 operators and the cooperation of 250,000 building service employes, made their survey, building owners laid plans for carrying passengers if the strike is called. Guards paced corridors, protecting elevators.

Many of the staffs of the larger buildings planned blocking any efforts to paralyze their business by stationing heavy forces of guards on the ground floors and carrying passengers from the second floor up.

Although admitting the walkout seemed inevitable, Ben Golden, Mayor LaGuardia's special mediator, was still striving to bring the realty interests and union leaders into some kind of accord.

France Fears Early Invasion By Nazi Army

Reich Can Put 5,500,000 Men in Field in Year, Deputies Told.

Paris, Nov. 19 (AP).—France was warned sharply today that Germany was building up a mighty military machine and could, by next year, throw 5,500,000 men into action within a few days.

This was the declaration of Leon Archimbaud, reporter of the budget, who asked credits of 5,689,215,000 francs (about $376,300,000) for the 1935 war budget.

"The enemies of France," Archimbaud declared, "are intensively preparing for war as though it were to be in the near future."

Simultaneously, Marshal Franchet d'Esperey announced:

"I find the French army is not going satisfactorily.

"The situation seems to be at least as grave as in 1914. The Germans are preparing, and we are not preparing enough. They are as dangerous as they were then."

Attack Feared.

Col. Jan Fabry, former minister of war, published a lengthy signed article in which he said he feared the possibility of a sudden paralyzing attack on France conducted in three phases:

1. Terrific, lightning-like air raid.
2. The swift invasion of small, powerful forces by way of Belgium and Switzerland to complete the destruction from the air.
3. The surging wave of a powerful occupying force capable of ending the war within a few weeks.

Col. Fabry demanded a strong government and domestic unity to face such a danger.

$25,000 Writ Aimed At President's Son

Boston, Nov. 19 (AP).—James Allen, clerk of the United States District Court, today issued a writ of attachment for $25,000 against Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., son of the President and a sophomore at Harvard University.

Arthur P. Digan, counsel for the plaintiff, Mrs. Daniel P. O'Leary, 60, said the writ was obtained in connection with an automobile accident on March 24 in which Mrs. O'Leary was struck by a car operated by young Roosevelt. Digan explained that the writ was a preliminary step prior to a declaration asking $25,000 on behalf of Mrs. O'Leary.

Two Gunmen Hunted In Texas Brush Land

Waco, Tex., Nov. 19 (AP).—Two gunmen wanted for murder, kidnaping and automobile theft, hid today in the heavy brush between Hillsboro and Cooledge while officers endeavored to prevent them stealing another car and escaping from the guarded area.

Rain and mud made it difficult to track down the fugitives, Joe Averett and Roy Curry, but officers found evidence they were afoot in the brush lands.

Entente Backs Plea To Curb Terrorism

League Appeal Spurred by Slaying of King.

Geneva, Nov. 19 (AP).—Statesmen of the little entente met today and agreed an appeal should be made to the Council of the League of Nations to combat terrorists like those responsible for the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Foreign Minister Barthou of France.

The form of the requested opposition to terrorist organizations was not disclosed, but presumably it would be based upon article 11 of the league covenant.

A spokesman said if the appeal were directed against Hungary, the Hungarians will be driven to reveal internal conditions in Yugoslavia, which are forcing the Croats to take refuge in Hungary and elsewhere.

Rail Refund Awarded Owner of Audley Farm

B. B. Jones, Berryville, Va., race horse breeder, was awarded yesterday $1,609 reparation by the Interstate Commerce Commission from the Norfolk & Western and other railways because of alleged unreasonable application of tariff regulations under which 1930 emergency drought relief rates were denied him on shipments of hay from points in Michigan, according to the Associated Press.

Jones is owner of the famous Audley Farm near Berryville.

"Caravan," a New Fox Musical Production, Will Open Tomorrow at RKO-Keith's

Will Dislodge Dickens' Play As Major Film

"Great Expectations" Out; Eleanor Powell Signed; About the Showshops.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Perpetuating his cherished reputation as the incomparable upsetter of schedules, among the showmen of the National Capital, Manager Hardie Meakin, whose acumen is relied upon for the perspicacious guidance of the destinies of RKO-Keith's Theater, just around the corner there on Fifteenth street, announces with all the complacence bred of long habit that he will break out a new bill tomorrow.

The newest cinematographic object of Mr. Meakin's enthusiasm is an item by Fox, known as "Caravan." It will succeed Mr. Dickens' "Great Expectations," which had some that didn't jell, as Fifteenth street's chief claim to theatrical attention, come approximately 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Three-in-One Film.

"Caravan" is by way of being several pictures in one, according to advance report—not supplied by Mr. Meakin.

In plot, it is said to be a light dramatic romance that builds eventually to a triangle situation not wholly unknown to the theater. In locale, settings and background, some one has said that it bears a close resemblance to an educational travelogue. Musically, it is a colorful operetta, combining sentimental songs, "hot" modern numbers and stirring martial airs—all variegated by vocal, instrumental, solo and choral treatment.

"Caravan" is the first American production directed by Erik Charell, the man who made "Congress Dances."

Boyer Stars First Time.

Charles Boyer, whom a vague memory seems to identify as the husband of Pat Paterson, is the star of the film. He is surrounded by a notable list of native and popular imported players, among them Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Louise Fazenda—and where has she been all these months?—Eugene Pallette, C. Aubrey Smith, Charlie Grapewin, of the old vaudeville team of Charlie Grapewin and Anna Chance; Noah Beery, Dudley Digges, Lionel Belmore, Richard Carle, Billy Bevan and Armand Kaliz.

The place and time of the story, unless you turned that last corner, are rural Hungary and the celebration of the grape harvest.

Further particularization, I am beginning to suspect, will have to go over until Wednesday morning in this space—or nearby.

It is not with complete and bewildering astonishment that one contemplates the departure of "Great Expectations" after a run of only four days.

As was remarked here last Wednesday, following the picture's preview at a private screening on Tuesday, its plot was abstruse and heavy-footed in the early sequences and the entire fashion of the story one that lent itself with less facility to the screen than numerous others of the same author's works that might be named.

There was occasion, however, to place rather more implicit faith in the supposedly strong public appeal of the performances offered by Henry Hull, George Breakston and one or two others in the cast than subsequent events seem to have justified.

What actually is at the bottom of it all, probably, is an overconfidence on the part of producer, exhibitor and the critics that there are still a great army of readers of Dickens in the world. Perhaps there are, but they seem not to be numbered among the most ardent supporters of the cinema!

Signed for New One.

Eleanor Powell, that incomparable tap-dancer recently seen in a headline spot on one of the stage bills at Loew's Fox Theater, has been engaged for a featured role in the forthcoming musical production, "Going Places and Doing Sings," which the Messrs. Shubert will present shortly after the first of the year.

As a matter of fact, Miss Powell is the only member of the cast, so far, who has been engaged for this new revue by Raymond Knight, a writer for radio when pursuing his regular occupation. The names of the composers, even, have not been announced, if, as yet, they have been decided upon.

Unlike their big revue hit, "Life Begins at 8:40," at the Winter Garden, the new musical will be of the intimate type and will be offered in one of the smaller Shubert theaters in New York.

In the meantime, Miss Powell is articled to journey to the West Coast shortly to make one picture. Upon its completion, she will return to Broadway to begin rehearsals in the new piece whose title looks like a misprint, but isn't. That would be early in January, according to present estimates.

When the hour arrived for Burton Holmes' travel talk on "Soviet Russia," in the National Theater yesterday afternoon at 3, two box offices were in full operation, selling two lines of customers that wound out of the lobby and curled themselves into two impressive queues under the theater's expansive marquee. It was after 3:30 when the last of the cash customers was seated. The lecture, of which something will be found in another column, was worth the attention it attracted and, I reiterate, should be repeated before the Holmes' season is over.

Plan Second Season.

It is that alert and erudite student of the theater in all of its ramifications, Mr. Oliver M. Sayler, who passes along the word that ambitious plans for the second season of African Dancers, Inc., the group which became the talk of New York with its production of "Kykunkor" last spring and early summer, have just been announced by Ann Kennedy, who originally discovered this native African company of artists and introduced them to the New York public interested in dance and lyric drama.

The second season, according to Miss Kennedy, will begin late this month or early in December in a theater which is still in process of negotiation, and which will be announced within a few days.

The season will begin with a wholly new production of an entirely new version of "Kykunkor," which will be followed by another production from native African sources, under the direction of Asadata Dafora, the founder and organizer of the group and its leading performer.

Later, these two productions will be presented in repertory fashion, preceding a long tour of the country which is now being booked by Mr. Sayler, in association with Charles Wagner, in answer to numerous requests, which have been coming to Miss Kennedy ever since the successful engagements of "Kykunkor" last season.

Washington, Mr. Sayler?

Dots and Dashes.

"The Painted Veil," latest vehicle—and some say best—for Greta Garbo, was screened backstage at Loew's Fox last night at 9 . . . A matter in which this department was accorded no benefit whatever by Burton Holmes, this column, some art, a mess of captions, "Straight From Hollywood," Film Tables and a few other details of minor importance . . . This is the picture in which Garbo is supported by both Herbert Marshall and George Brent . . . Much, they say, to the romantic interest of all concerned . . . It was directed by Richard Boleslavsky from the story by W. Somerset Maugham . . . Hope I see it sometime! . . . "The Road to Yesterday," one of the most popular of Rida Johnson Young's romances of an earlier theater, is being revived by the Dramatic Club of Tech High, on Friday and Saturday of this week at 8 p. m., in the school auditorium, Second and T streets northeast . . . Verna Volz, Maxine Kahn and Amanda Chittum have been selected for the leading roles in "The Torch-Bearer," first production of the year of Cue and Curtain, the dramatic organization of George Washington University . . . Wardman Park Theater, in December . . . With Anton Hardt directing . . . That modest little chap sitting next to Johnny Davis, who steals most of the spotlight from the brass section of Waring's Pennsylvanians, at the Earle, is Nels Keller . . . He has been with the band from the outset . . . And can he toot a trumpet! . . . Scotty Bates, the juvenile comic, Fred picked up on the Coast during one of the orchestra's long stays out there, making musical comedies with Dorothy Lee . . . She would be the kid in all of the Wheeler and Woolsey screen plays and personal stage appearances . . . That is, I suppose she would be . . . She always has been! . . . Lawrence Tibbett sang Bill Handy's "St. Louis Blues" over the air recently and explained to his invisible audience that Duke Ellington played the number before an audience of serious music lovers in Paris and they loved it . . . Maybe I'm wrong!

Call-It-Even Note.

However, I have been going for Ellington's "Mood Indigo," the time when "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," in a big way, lately.

They've got me whipped, so just let "that evenin' sun go down" by itself, if you don't mind!

"THE GIRLS FROM THE FOLLIES." Independent Burlesque Association presentation in two acts and 26 scenes, with Harry Harrigan, Joe Stanley, Frank O'Neil, Bert Grant, Richard Brooks, Jean Bodine, Joy St. Claire, Helen Green, Peggy Delmar and Dorothy Ahearn. Book by Gus Flagg; dance routines by Regina Windsor. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Even with names such as Dorothy Ahearn, Joy St. Clair and Jean Bodine, with which to conjure, "The Girls From the Follies" falls something short of sensationally exciting entertainment.

"The Girls From the Follies" simply does not have the material out of which to formulate a presentation which can even approximate the high average of the Independent Burlesque Association. Although the three charming misses aforementioned are outstanding in a particularly dull show, yet even they seem to be afflicted with an unwonted lassitude.

The comics—Harry Harrigan, dialectician, and Joe Stanley, deadpanner—work hard to put over a book of gags that Gus Flagg forgot to write. The skits are draggy, and the farceurs, with Frank O'Neil, Bert Grant and Richard Brooks, as the straight men, are beset no end with difficulties.

If an unqualified word of commendation is to be offered, it must be given Impresario James J. Lake for his customary good taste in colorfully staging the opus. Indeed, "Col. Jimmie" makes a good show better, and a poor show somewhat good.

First Actor Addresses Aspirants to Stardom

Before concluding his record engagement in Eugene O'Neill's play of "Ah, Wilderness," in the National Theater last week, George M. Cohan, "first actor of the American theater," found time before the Saturday matinee to address the student body at the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts. Mr. Cohan, seated, right center, talked to a group of 50 potential future stars of the stage for three-quarters of an hour, stressing in his remarks that the theater is a serious business, not to be taken lightly. Stephen E. Cochran, manager of the National and president of the academy, is standing, center.

BurtonHolmes' 'Soviet Russia' Draws Capacity

First Travel Talk Attracts His Biggest Crowd Since 1929 at the National.

"SOVIET RUSSIA." First of a series of five Sunday afternoon travel talks, with motion picture and "still" illustrations by Burton Holmes, with natural coloring by Mildred Petrs. Projection by Merritt M. Mitchell. At the National Theater.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Reportorial in style, nonpartisan rather than controversial and as minutely informative as the rigid governmental inhibitions placed upon "intourist" photographers will permit, Burton Holmes' travel talk on "Soviet Russia" yesterday afternoon attracted the largest audience to the National Theater that has attended one of this distinguished globe-trotter's illustrated lectures in the National Capital since the "crash" year of 1929.

Prefacing his recitation of what he found in the U. S. S. R. last spring and summer with a brief survey of the many superior aspects of our own form of government, interlarding another brief visit to his Hollywood hilltop home—Topside—and gazing again out of those familiar windows of his high New York apartment overlooking Central Park, the speaker launched into the real substance of his engrossing remarks upon arrival in the "magnified Moscow of today."

The extensive tour of present-day Russia and the intensive examination of its tremendously fascinating experiment in human destiny then progressed methodically up and down and across the "Empire of all the Russias," that was, from Moscow to Leningrad and the Crimea and from the dreary battlefield of Balaklava, where rode the 600, to the "Russian Riviera" along the fringes of the Black Sea and back again to Moscow for the overpowering spectacle of "May Day." Palaces, hovels, museums, hospitals, cities, villages and metropolises, all were included.

In the course of his disclosures, Mr. Holmes was frank in his emphasis of the improved housing, food, service and courtesy afforded the intourist during the past three years.

Much of his pictorial material, perforce, dated back to an earlier tour in the Czaristic days of 1901. There can be no gainsaying the visual evidences of a vast economic improvement in the status of the proletariat in the meantime.

With the Russian state's effort to stamp out religious worship, Mr. Holmes obviously has no patience—as who has? For its exuberant vigor in promoting some of the world's most fabulous industrial and commercial projects, he quite as patently holds the deepest admiration. For the magnitude of the experiment, he has profound respect.

It is regrettable that so much of the pictorial portion of this splendid talk must date back so far into the past—regrettable, that is, until these resurrected achievements of earlier tours bring to the screen in motion, Czar Nicholas II, in closeup; his Empress and their family; Count Leo Tolstoi, with his family at their summer home, Maxim Gorky, Stalin and other vital figures, known only vaguely to the mass of Americans.

This is one of Burton Holmes' most comprehensive lectures—illuminating, unprejudiced and forceful—on a topic of livest world interest. It is my thought that it will bear repetition before his new season at the National is concluded, if that can be arranged, to response no less enthusiastic than yesterday's.

What a Night!

Man Rescued From Falls, Sent to Hospital and Lands in Precinct.

Baltimore, Nov. 19 (AP).—Leo Birch, 31, of Washington, today could look back over an exciting week-end.

It included a dip into Jones Falls here, a trip to a hospital and a trip to a police station. James A. Moore, an oiler at the city pumping station at the Falls, heard cries for help Sunday night in the Falls. He heaved a line and pulled in Birch.

Patrolman William E. Conroy sent Birch to a hospital, where he was treated for exposure and then taken to the police station, where a charge of drunkenness was placed against him.

success of the drive so far and urged that extra effort be made during the wind-up days.

The Chest now has 74.39 per cent of its goal. This means that the drive is 3.48 per cent behind "par," —the first time during the campaign that results have fallen below the desired progress.

The Group Solitictation Unit, which is directed by Walter B. Clarkson, made the second best report yesterday. It took in $40,-235.14, giving it 54.9 per cent of its quota.

Metropolitan Group.

Next came the Metropolitan Unit, led by Joseph D. Kaufman, with $17,529.95, completing 51.74 of its quota. Charles Carroll Morgan's Special Gifts Unit added $16,142 to its score, giving it 78.6 per cent of its quota.

John Dickinson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, was the luncheon speaker. He urged Washingtonians to share their Thanksgiving with the less fortunate by making a contribution to the Chest drive. The Rev. William L. Mayo, assistant rector of St. Paul's Church, delivered the invocation.

G. O. P. Comeback Predicted by Nice

Maryland's New Governor Sees Roosevelt Defeat.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 19 (AP).—Harry W. Nice, recently elected Governor of Maryland over the Democratic incumbent, Albert C. Ritchie, says the Republican Party is "no more dead now than the Democratic Party was after than terrible licking in 1928."

En route to Jacksonville by steamer, the Governor-elect was here a few hours last night.

"I predict that the Republican Party will stage just as great a comeback as the Democratic Party," Nice said. "I honestly believe that it is entirely possible that President Roosevelt will be defeated in 1936."

Ship Crew Unable to Identify 2 Found Dead on Lonely Isle

scientific party to the archipelago. It told of the mysterious departure of the baroness and her companions.

Neither the Ritters nor the Wittmans were known to have a boat. Letters, such as the packet found written by Mrs. Wittman, were either left in a barrel at Postoffice Bay of Charles Island, or given to the fishing boats that infrequently stopped there. Thus the presence of the letters would not necessarily mean that the bodies were those of any two of the nine inhabitants of Charles Island. The only baby clothes in the Archipelago, as far as known, were of the Wittman family.

Passport No Clue.

A strange angle was the finding of a passport of Lorenz in the shirt pocket of one of the victims. He was small and frail, and the second body might possibly be his, but his companion, Philipson, was of bushy hair, not slightly bald.

The Santa Amaro steamed away for fishing grounds more northerly, after reporting the mystery, but without knowledge of the victims' identity.

Should another fishing boat reach the scene, or visit Charles Island, the mystery might be solved by information from the Ritters. There is no radio there, and the next vessel known to plan a stop there is the exploration cruiser of Capt. Hancock, which sails from here Friday.

Ouster Hearing On For Jail Warden

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (AP). Jurors were summoned today, following arrival of Judge Don P. Halsey, of Lynchburg, and final preparations were made for the opening tomorrow of the hearing of City Sergeant John G. Saunders, to show cause why he should not be removed from office.

The rule against the veteran custodian of the Richmond City Jail was issued on recommendation of a special grand jury which investigated the escape of Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, convicted gangster murderers, still at large following the break in which they killed a policeman and wounded three other persons.

Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon said today he was considering the advisability of entering a nolle prosse in the case of Mrs. Elizabeth Mais, mother of the gangster, who is charged with being an accessory to the murder of Policeman W. A. Toot, killed in the jail break.

china, with necessary replacement, ever since.

Like that selected by Mrs. Roosevelt, the Wilson china is mellow Lenox and is decorated in navy blue and gold and bears the President's crest. For small dinners there are enough of the famous Cleveland rose plates selected by Mrs. Cleveland when she came as bride to the White House. There is not enough of the china of any other administration to use, although the cases in the "china room" of the lower east corridor of the White House contain a very complete collection of samples of china used by each administration.

Mrs. Harding and Mrs. Coolidge confined themselves to replacements of the Wilson state service, but Mrs. Hoover added ash trays to match the service.

It has always been the prerogative of the First Ladies to select the White House china. The selection must be approved by the President before it can be paid for out of White House appropriations.

Fire Razes Home Of Ex-Legislator

Charles W. Messick House Burned to Ground.

Laurel, Del., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—The home of Charles W. Messick, a member of the Delaware Legislature of 1928, and speaker of the House, was burned to the ground this morning as fire companies from Laurel and Seaford stood by powerless, due to a lack of water.

Nothing was saved from the upper stories of the building. Household goods and furniture in the lower rooms were carried to safety. Among the valuables destroyed by the fire was a watch presented to Messick by members of the House of Representatives.

The loss is reckoned at more than $10,000.

Walt Mason Himself

The Still Tongue.

When Charles J. Dinglebat was pinched and charged up with a grievous crime—for lesser things men have been lynched—he maintained silence all the time. In vain men asked him to confess that he had done the state a wrong; he merely said, "I'll wait, I guess, until my lawyer comes along. I do not care what you may think, what you have seen, what you have heard; until I have that legal gink I shall not say a blooming word." A bad impression thus arose; "If he were innocent," men said, "he'd surely tell whate'er he knows, and knock the blamed indictment dead. He wouldn't stand in silence grim, as though of rugged granite built, while everyone is roasting him and betting kopecks on his guilt." His friends went to him in the jail and asked him to hand out the truth; he said, "I shall not tell my tale until my lawyer's in this booth." At last his innocence was proved, he was as white as driven snow; and people to his doorway moved to hear him tell his tale of woe. "Oh, why did you refuse to speak when first they slammed you in a cell? You'd rather hear your fetters creak than tell the people what befell." "It is a crazy thing," he said, "to talk too much when in a jam, for all you say will soon be spread from Buffalo to Hoover's Dam. And every word will get a twist so it will seem a thing rebuilt, and judge and jury will insist that you have proven your own guilt. So when you're up against the law, accused of any crime or wrong, just put a padlock on your jaw until your lawyer comes along."

T. M. Wampler Weds Secretly In Fairfax, Va.

Married Wyvil Haslam, of Hamilton Hotel, Last Thursday.

T. Morris Wampler, former Washington attorney, who is under $5,000 bond on his appeal from a sentence of 18 months for income tax evasion, was married last Thursday in Fairfax, Va., to Miss Wyvil L. Haslam, of the Hamilton Hotel, it was learned yesterday.

Fairfax officials said the issuance of the marriage license was not revealed until yesterday because the couple had asked that it not be released to the press.

Convicted as Tax Evader.

Wampler was convicted of evading the income tax law in Baltimore after a trial in which the Government charged he obtained undeclared income amounting to more than $61,000 through manipulation of the "badger game" on Edward B. Dean, sr., an 80-year-old Washington millionaire contractor and client.

The marriage was preformed by the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, rector of the Truro Episcopal Church, Fairfax. Wampler gave his age as 50, and Miss Haslam, 28.

Served Half of Term.

After serving about half of his 18 months term at Federal prison in Lewisburg, Pa., Wampler applied for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground he should have been tried in the District instead of in Baltimore. The petition has not yet been ruled upon.

The former Mrs. Florence B. Wampler, who died last February, provided in her will that Wampler might live with their daughter, to whom she left her estate, providing he refrained from drinking, gambling and did not remarry.

Deputy Cleared In Man's Death

Shot Escaping Suspect in Liquor Case, While Serving Warrant.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 19 (AP).—A coroner's jury today exonerated Deputy Sheriff Robert F. Taylor in the fatal shooting of Nathan Lucas, 24, of Clear Spring, Md.

The jury returned a verdict that Taylor fired in "full performance of his duties as an officer of the law."

Lucas was shot Thursday night when he attempted to escape from Taylor and another deputy who came to his home to serve a bench warrant for a liquor violation. He died in Washington County Hospital here Sunday afternoon of peritonitis, which resulted from his wounds.

At the inquest, Taylor testified he was reading the warrant to Lucas when the man suddenly dashed past him. Taylor said he called to him to halt several times before firing his revolver. He said he attempted to fire over Lucas' head, as he fled up the hill, but misjudged his aim in the darkness.

Police Hunt Pair After 2 Holdups

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—Police were searching tonight for two colored men who assertedly held up two couples in a lonely spot near here last night. Officers noted similarity between last night's cases and the murder last spring of Miss Fannie Kurz, who, with her escort, Milton Brown, were badly beaten while parked in Battlefield Park.

Wallace Jones, of Warsaw, and Sergt. Mike Debiski, of the Quantico Marine Corps, were the victims of last night's holdups. Jones said that he and a woman companion were parked on the Kings highway near Little Falls, south of here, when accosted by two armed men who drove up in another automobile. Jones said he locked one door and started the automobile before his assailants could open the other door.

Between Two Stools.

It will be six years next month since the League of Nations first sought to settle the Chaco controversy.

When hostilities first broke out between Bolivia and Paraguay, in December, 1928, the Council of the League was in session. Under the presidency of M. Briand it promptly called both parties to a realization of their responsibilities under the League Covenant. Incidentally, the reply of the Foreign Minister of Paraguay at that time was that "Paraguay does not refuse any conciliation procedure for the settlement of her dispute, still less the procedure laid down in conventions to which she has given her solemn acceptance."

Now a special session of the League Assembly is sitting at Geneva in the hope of ending the dalliance and evasion with which this secondary but disturbing conflict has been handled by the international peace machinery. It is apparent that stronger pressure on the belligerents than heretofore attempted will be advocated.

As was the case in the Manchurian controversy, the incapacity of the League to stop this war has resulted in close analysis of the reasons for failure. There are several, but prominent among them has been the difficulty of taking any international action in South America which could be interpreted as hostile to the Monroe Doctrine. In consequence American criticism of the inglorious record of the League in this political difficulty must, in justice, be tempered by the reflection that our nonmembership at Geneva has enormously complicated the task.

On the committee now appointed to push the current plan for settlement the United States is invited to take a seat, of course, without assuming any further responsibility to the League. If we are really interested in furthering settlement of a dispute which has baffled the good offices of Washington, as well as Geneva, we shall accept this request for temporary cooperation. The war in the Chaco has brought no credit to either the League or the United States. It is our own prestige, as much as that of Geneva, which urges a firm and united consideration of this intractable problem.

The Wrong Turning.

The Emperor of Japan, on his way to inspect a primary school at Kiryu, arrived half-an-hour ahead of time when the police sergeant driving the pilot car took the wrong turning. A simple error, it would have been laughed off in this country and the most dire result would have been the transfer of the sergeant to a beat in "the sticks."

But Japan is another country. There the home minister is said to consider resignation; the cabinet is shaken; local officials at Kiryu have thrown up their jobs; and the sergeant has tried to commit suicide. Thus are seen the consequences of taking the wrong turning.

The whole affair points up the vast difference between eastern and western psychology. It brings out mysterious traditions of an ancient land which are hard for us to comprehend. But while all Japan is breathlessly awaiting the final outcome of the policeman's faux pas, so serious there but which the Occidental mind sees only as a Gilbertian farce, perhaps there is a moral hidden behind the incident.

Taking the wrong turning is apt to lead to dire complications, whether it be during a royal procession—or a naval conference.

Children's Books.

F. P. A., that delightful old grouch, whose capacity for indignation upon unimportant topics knows no bounds, has added reviews of children's books to his pet hates, along with dry sweeping and invisible house numbers. And it's about time he, or somebody, did.

It is his belief that most reviews of children's books are as patronizing as most books written for children. Unfortunately this is so, as even the slight reading which we indulged in during Children's Week revealed. Most childrens' books are written by grown-ups, and seemingly more for the latter's own consumption than for the enjoyment of the youngsters.

That is why few children enjoy "Gulliver's Travels" while all grown-ups who return to this satire are wild about it, particularly if they get hold of an unexpurgated edition. There are, of course, many books which children of all ages enjoy, but now, as in the days when the good Dr. Watts' hymns were the usual Christmas gift, it seems as if the greater number of children's books were written because some fussy old maid or pompous uncle felt that he had something to say to the children that would "be good for them."

The Du Pont Letter.

Advance towards elimination of the evils involved in the private traffic in arms involves a twofold procedure. In the first place public opinion must be on record as demanding solution of the problem. There must be the will to find a way. In the second place practical as opposed to merely quixotic methods of solution must be advanced. The popular will, usually emotional and unreflective, must have thoughtful leadership if it is to be transformed into effective action.

Senator Nye's committee has greatly helped in arousing public indignation over the anti-social aspects of the arms traffic. And by that token he has obviously done much to stimulate Lamot du Pont, president of the famous du Pont company, to make the very constructive suggestion contained in his letter to the Senator. Mr. Nye's committee, in turn, will now do well to make extensive use of those suggestions in framing its legislation for the consideration of Congress.

Three separate suggestions are made by Mr. du Pont. First and foremost, that excess war profits be eliminated in response to a popular demand which the manufacturer properly calls "sound and just." Second, that the problem of the international traffic be approached, as the State Department is now approaching it, as an evil which can only be effectively solved by international agreement. Third, that Government control, rather than nationalization, be the objective in domestic policy.

It is only on this final argument that there would seem to be room for real differences of opinion between Senator Nye and Mr. du Pont. The former seems to believe that the manufacture of munitions can feasibly be made a governmental monopoly. If munitions are narrowly defined as ordnance this, in peacetime, is perhaps an attainable end. But as Mr. du Pont points out, in any literal sense of the word munitions include almost everything from shoes to medicine; and from cotton to coal. "A modern nation fighting for its life requires practically all its manufacturers to become munition makers."

The issue of Government monopoly, however, is certainly far from the first step. That is, simply, whether the machinery of international cooperation can be utilized to eliminate the grave abuses in the overseas traffic in arms. Mr. du Pont is the first great munitions manufacturer in any country not merely to assert that this is a desirable goal, but also to state that his own country "can immediately initiate its own policies in this respect" without waiting on the full collaboration of others.

The sensational disclosures of the Nye committee, followed by the eminently practical proposals of Mr. du Pont, have together gone far to make the solution of a most complicated problem seem really feasible.

An Apostle Of Peace.

Pietro, Cardinal Gasparri, statesman and authority on canon law, is mourned by many more than the millions who render spiritual allegiance to Rome. He will long be held in affectionate remembrance outside that faith because, through a life of unceasing labor, he consistently fought for the application of ethical and moral concepts to political and economic problems.

It was the statesmanship of Gasparri, secretary of state under three Popes, which made truce between France and the Holy See. It was Gasparri, a frank opponent of Fascism's ruder phases, who none the less successfully reconciled the old quarrel between his church and the Italian government, thus releasing the prisoner of the Vatican.

When the World War set Europe and the seas aflame, Gasparri launched heroic efforts to secure the basis for an enduring peace. Amid these he found time to devise and set in motion a successful system of communication with prisoners. The suicidal conflict over, it was Gasparri who, even after his resignation in 1930, most greatly aided the broad-minded social encyclicals of the present pontiff. The influence of these in creating firmer foundations for a better industrial order is not to be underestimated.

So did Gasparri labor to the last. Dying at 82, he is fitly celebrated by his fellow religionists as a great prince of their church. By secular history he will be celebrated as a true apostle of peace.

Poverty Amid Abundance.

The production facilities of the United States are so great that the wants of every American citizen could be satisfied without operating our industrial plants at full capacity, according to the findings of the National Survey of Potential Products Capacity. To make the potential output of our production facilities available, however, it is estimated that all of the 27,000,000 families in the United States would have to receive a minimum income of $4,370, without an increase in the present cost of living.

On the other hand, a study of "America's Capacity to Produce," published by the Brookings Institution, leads to the conclusion that if all family incomes were to be raised to a minimum of $2,500, consumption demands would exceed the potential productive capacity of the Nation in 1929. That capacity is estimated to have been $86,000,000,000—a figure that contrasts sharply with the $118,000,000,000 income which the Federal production survey considers essential.

Estimates of what the country can produce are, of course, subject to a wide margin of error. Moreover, there is a great difference between the potential volume of physical output, with a given capital equipment, and the amount that might conceivably be produced if full advantage were taken of the technical knowledge now available. In any case, it is generally agreed that even in 1929 a large proportion of the American people had to forego needed goods and services that could have been provided by fuller utilization of our existing production facilities. Today, of course, the volume of unsatisfied needs has resulted in conspicuous and widespread poverty in the midst of potential plenty, thus stimulating an intensive search for remedies.

The engineers, "technocrats" and social planners perform a useful public service in focusing public attention upon the fact that living standards can be raised only by increasing production and not by restricting it. Even if their estimates of our capacity to produce sometimes appear to be greatly exaggerated, their emphasis is sound.

To state the case, however, does not provide a solution of the problem of poverty, except in a theoretical way. It simply shows that want can not be banished by monetary increases in the income of the people, unless productive output is simultaneously expanded. That is a truth which should be self-evident, but it is well to have it repeated at frequent intervals, especially in a report sponsored by the Federal Government.

How Long Is The Yardstick?

In his address at Tupelo, the first town to sign a power contract with the TVA, President Roosevelt predicted that: "What you are doing here is going to be copied in every State of the Union before we get through."

By the private utility interests that declaration may be taken as conveying a threat of ultimate extinction that goes beyond anything previously suggested. But it is coupled with assurances that Federal power projects will be regarded as a "yardstick" by which to test the performance of private companies. This is a challenge to the utilities, but a challenge which would seem to be given with an open mind regarding the relative merits of public and private ownership and control.

If by following strictly comparable and businesslike methods of accounting, the TVA should succeed in reducing power costs throughout the area served, the case for an extension of public ownership would be greatly strengthened. However, so far as consumers are concerned, it does not matter greatly whether electricity is supplied by an efficiently managed and adequately regulated private concern or by an equally efficient public enterprise. The real issues are whether the one is obtaining excessive profits, and whether the other is covertly subsidized at public expense.

To provide a fair test of the two systems is not merely a work of time, but also one which calls for an elaborate and discriminating system of cost accounting. The mere fact that a small town in Mississippi has made a contract with the TVA which assures a supply of cheap power certainly does not demonstrate the efficiency of the stupendous and incomplete enterprise in the Tennessee Valley. The "practical experience" which in the opinion of the President is causing opposition to fade has in fact not yet been acquired. The public is still "waiting to be shown." If the test is honest, no legitimate grounds for quarreling with the final results will be afforded, whether they favor private or public enterprise.

Evidently, the TVA experiment can not provide such a fair, decisive test unless every dollar of the great outlay of Federal funds is subject to scrupulously fair accounting. Overhead costs must be equitably apportioned between power developments, flood control and navigation; full allowance has to be made for taxes and other charges placed upon private enterprise; all public subsidies must be recognized as such.

Otherwise, the yardstick will degenerate into a deceptive measuring rod that may defraud the taxpayers of vast sums in order to furnish the blessings of cheaper power to preferred groups at the expense of a form of private enterprise which certainly deserves something more than contumely for its services to the people of this country.

One Reactionary To Another.

Postmaster General Farley attributes the defeat of Senators Reed, Fess, Robinson and others of the Republican Old Guard to their inability to rise above narrow partisanship in a great national emergency. "They had become so fossilized," Mr. Farley says with complacent sadness, "that they were incapable of appreciating progress in economic thought."

So this shining example of Tammany's political liberalism exults over the disappearance of "these archpriests of a bygone day," who have left behind them "only a remnant of their order in either Chamber of Congress." The joker is that the debacle of the G. O. P. has left in the seats of the mighty an outstanding representative of a very old, and thoroughly discredited system of political manipulation. We refer to the substantial person of Mr. Farley himself.

That new economic deal about which the Postmaster General speaks so eloquently requires for its successful functioning a trained nonpartisan body of civil servants, selected on the basis of merit. In opposition thereto stands Mr. Farley, the acknowledged "archpriest" of that school of thought which believes in awarding public offices to the victors in partisan contests.

So long as Chairman Farley of the Democratic national committee clings to a Cabinet post that gives him unexampled opportunities for "playing politics," his rebukes to misguided Republicans who fail to sense the freshness of a new dawn can not be taken very seriously. The only way for Mr. Farley to avoid being ranked with the Neanderthalers is to resign his office as Postmaster General, and leave the conduct of the New Deal to those who realize that economic liberalism and political reaction are strange bedfellows.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

"Reformed Versifier."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is gratifying to know that The Washington Post (in my opinion the superior newspaper of Washington) is showing its appreciation of one of the fine arts, poetry, by publishing the poetry column each Monday.

It was my good fortune to be able to attend a recent meeting of the Poet Laureate League, and to listen to the speaker of the evening, a most charming and capable young woman, Hope Ridings Miller, who edits your poetry column. I must congratulate your paper upon having such a rare personality on your staff.

Today I read with interest and considerable amusement the Reformed Versifier's letter of November 12. Apparently his idea of proper living conditions for contemporary poets, is to huddle together in garrets, and while existing in such unhealthful squalor, they may be able to write something that will be heralded as a masterpiece a few generations hence. Where has he been all these years? There was a time when Presidents got their exercise by rail splitting and their education by firelight, but things aren't being done that way now.

As we all know, most of our periodicals publish verse, yet very few pay anything for it. If poets were good organizers and business people, this condition would not exist—and if our dreamers are having an awakening—then more power to them! N. R. B.

Washington, Nov. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter appearing in your columns from "Reformed Versifier" has aroused both my sympathy and interest. This is clearly a case of misery loving company by one who has been disappointed and disillusioned in a calling for which nature has fitted him and our social system has denied him.

Most of our potential poets in America, both in the past and present, have not only been "reformed" but veritably crucified through the conditions with which they have been compelled to contend.

Yes, most emphatically, the poets are fighting for a place in the sun and are making rapid strides. They neither ask nor expect charity or doles, but merely wish to be paid for their productions which are accepted by publishers at a rate equal to that which is paid for crime news and scandals. Few publishers pay anything for acceptable verse today and our "Reformed Versifier" need not admonish them against instituting a practice which would be contrary to their interest in the declaration of dividends.

I sincerely hope that the poets may continue to organize and be encouraged in their efforts to bring the proper pressure from any source that may be required to make their lives something somewhat better than a frightful dream.

UNREFORMED VERSIFIER.

Washington, Nov. 17.

Educational Costs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every proposal for progressive reform, in whatever direction, is met nowadays by the single query, "Where is the money to come from?" To this rule, education is no exception. Can there be a more urgent duty for the serious citizen than to get to the bottom of this subject of finance?

What are the physical essentials of education? Are they not classes, books and schools—in human terms, teachers, printers and builders? Essential to the activities of these are the providers of the necessaries of life—food, clothing, shelter and amenities. A world that has all these can command anything else it desires. Whatever mankind can produce, mankind can "afford."

In their role of income-receivers, the citizens, as a whole, would lose every dollar that they saved in their role of taxpayers. Conversely, would the world be any poorer if it doubled its expenditure upon education? Not a cent; so long as teachers, printers and builders, and the producers of necessaries were available. Every dollar that it handed to the teachers, printers and builders, for their services, it would receive back as income, in payment of other services or goods (while the lubricant, money, circulated unceasingly). STUDENT.

Back To Bartering.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Secretary Perkins hastens to correct the alarming impression, evidently made throughout the country by the recent speech of the President to the Advisory Council of the Conference of Economic Security. Yet what the President said was true. It will take a great deal of money to provide old-age insurance as well as every other kind of insurance. As long as money continues to be the medium of exchange, the problems involved in raising a sufficient amount to care for those who must have these protections not only for their own sakes, but to provide a market for business prosperity, become, or will shortly become, insurmountable.

After all, the use of money is only about 500 years old. The return to barter is perfectly normal and natural, and, as a matter of fact, it has already begun. A large number of people in this country have been bartering their services for some time past—our Government, according to the papers, is considering bartering cotton with countries abroad. It seems so preeminently sensible and inevitable. Why delay?

ALICE CARPENTER.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 17.

Some Errors Are Corrected.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would like to call attention to several inaccuracies in the article which appeared in The Post of November 16, as a result of an interview which I gave your reporter, Miss Perrow. Your reporter, in speaking of the Indian emergency conservation work camps, says "the man who gets a job in one of them can take his family to the camp with him." This is not the case and is not what I told Miss Perrow. The situation which exists is that on many Indian reservations there are two kinds of conservation work camps—one which is known as the family camp—where families of workmen do come, set up their tents and maintain themselves very much as they would ordinarily; the other type of camp is the single-men's camp, which is administered as an ordinary construction camp would be anywhere under enlightened supervision. The family camp and the single men's camps are kept separate * * *

Miss Perrow makes me responsible for the statement that the Indian women are "learning to keep themselves and their houses clean and to care for their children in a scientific manner." The inhumanity of such a remark I must absolutely disclaim. Indian women, like any other mothers, want the best for their children. When they feel that they can trust white instructors, they are eager for learning, but learning alone will not banish poverty and a long distrust, which is founded on a very good reason, as the past history of Indian affairs will attest. I am editing a magazine devoted to the Indian people and I speak of them respectfully, for that is the feeling that I have toward them.

Miss Perrow also makes the statement that the Indian "conservation camps have provided work for the artists and the skilled workers as well as for the laborers." I do not know what she means by saying that the artists are employed in the conservation camps. There may be some artists so employed, but they are not employed as artists. As for the skilled workers, there is a field for them, although I see no reason for grouping them with artists, considering what the field is. It consists of such jobs as masons, carpenters, machine operators and similar work of the higher order which would be found on any big construction program. Miss Perrow continues, "Indian textile workers, weavers and artists often work in the camps." I disclaim having said such a thing, because it is not the case."

The following statement is perhaps the most extraordinary in the whole article: "One Indian who was a painter is doing some lovely murals for the science camp walls." This is such a hodge-podge of unrelated facts that I am embarrassed when I try to straighten it out. However, I gather that its derivation is about as follows: I showed to Miss Perrow some photographs of a Navajo priest engaged in making sand paintings, which is a part of the Navajo religious ritual, as I explained to Miss Perrow thoroughly.

Later in my interview I told her that a group of Indian students of the Santa Fe Indian School had painted some murals for their science classroom walls which had called forth some comment from critics throughout the country. This was in reply to Miss Perrow's naive question, "What do Indians do in the arts?" Why she combined the work of the old priest of the Navajos, which was done, I believe, at the Southeastern Fair in Atlanta, Ga., with the work of the group of young students at Santa Fe and then transported them to some mythical place called a science camp, I am at a loss to understand. But I object to being quoted as having said anything so absolutely silly. What is a "science camp"? I will be glad if Miss Perrow will explain.

The Post Impressionist

One Actor's Three Phases

Post Office, Tuesday.

GEORGE COHAN flicked invisible dust from the gay band of his broad-brimmed strawhat. The diamond on his finger was by no means invisible.

"You say there's more of the kangaroo in my dancing than in anybody else's? I dance that way because I like to, because my audiences like me to, and because it's the kind of dancing young America's just now doing with its heart—even if most of young America can't dance that way with its legs."

Maybe those weren't his words. But that was his thought. It occurred when the Post-Impressionist first met him. It was shortly after the vaudevillian "Four Cohans"—father Jerry, mother Helen, sister Josephine and boy George—had been promoted out of variety and onto the musical-comedy stage by the last-named member of the family.

Already George, as "The Governor's Son," was appearing at none save overflowing theatres. There he pranced, sang, darted the riotous lightnings of an inexhaustible energy, through a work of his own composition. There, with the other three Cohans, he would take uncountable curtain-calls:

"I thank you. My family thanks you. We all thank you."

He was young and American. He expressed the American youth of his day. So the American youth of his day loved him.

Only middle-aged people and elderly people said that he was absurd.

This continued until he had broken all records for remaining young. The Boy Orator of the Platte had long before become a poor second.

George kept going from success to success; "Running for Office," "Little Johnny Jones," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway"—wherein didn't Fay Templeton climb out of low comedy?—"George Washington Jr.," and 1909's "Yankee Prince." He wrote the dialogue that set all the young laughing. He made the music they all sang. He staged the productions and stage-managed them. Cicero says the perfection of art is its concealment; Cohan seemed to say:

"This is just as much fun for me as it is for you."

The old London music-hall performers invented that delightful deceit. But they carried it through mere "turns." Adding study of his public's spirit to its apparently spontaneous interpretation, Cohan carried the convention through his full-length musical-comedies, and carried conviction with it—to the young . . .

Finally, he did decide that even Cohanesque youth lacked "the image of eternity." While young George was still in large demand, Cohan began to play the role of mature producer. However, he brought to it those qualities which had made him successful in its predecessor.

He was mature and he was American. All mature Americans applauded him.

Now Washington has seen him in his third phase. Last week it saw him, aged 56, as the fifty-six-year-old father in "Ah, Wilderness!"

The play—excellent despite its faults—drew some spectators because modernist Eugene O'Neill wrote it: yet, from the point of view of construction and sentiment, it might have been written by Pinero in 1894. It drew other spectators because it was "about youth:" yet its leading boy could never be played satisfactorily—being too young for an experienced player, too difficult for a young one. In the matter of its acting—aside from the support given by Jean Adair as the mother—the performance was "made" by Cohan.

Overrated Irving, underrated Novelli, the great John Hare, big French and Germans: none ever gave us a five-minute scene superior to that in which Cohan's "Nat Miller" tries to tell his marble-frozen son what our fathers, by a term both too limited and too comprehensive, miscalled "the facts of life." With one tone, one gesture, evoking simultaneously laughter and tears, Cohan's performance there met all of Milton's requirements for poetry: "simple, sensuous, moving." Therefore it was art at the height of the natural . . .

Near us, a young fellow gave the charity of his knowledge to his middle-aged mother and young sister:

"People aren't like that."

His sister nodded. His mother turned away to smile—and get out her handkerchief.

The secret of George Michael Cohan's success is best read in his audiences. He has had three phases—only one rule. He has faithfully studied, expressed, interpreted—to itself—his own generation in his own country.

Here's hoping he lives to an old age.

Here's knowing that, if he does, we shall have some splendid old gentlemen.

Unique System In Italy Now Well Developed

Representation by Occupation Supplants Old Geographical Way.

By Lothrop Stoddard,

IN order to understand the real meaning of Italy's "Corporate State" so ardently extolled by Mussolini the other day, we must forget for the moment all our traditional ideas about Government and try to put ourselves in quite a different realm of political thinking. Fascism is a strictly one-party affair; no organized opposition of any kind is tolerated. Indeed, the very conception of a political party, as we use the term, does not apply.

The Fascist organization, headed by Mussolini and its grand council, stands for the nation as a whole. The elected chamber which we think of as a Parliament is really an assembly of experts representing the various corporate groups into which the people are organized, according to their occupations, trades or professions. That is the reason for the term: Corporate State.

Curiously enough, the germ of this idea was due, not to conscious syndicalist planning on the part of Fascist leaders or thinkers, but to a spontaneous development which arose before the Fascists seized power 12 years ago. In the economic chaos that followed the war in Italy, certain groups emerged here and there, consisting of both employers and employed, landlords and peasants, and known as "mixed syndicates."

• • • •

NOTING their highly successful record, Mussolini took over these mixed syndicates, made them nation-wide in scope, and built up an elaborate superstructure, ranging from the innumeral local organizations, through provincial and regional bodies, right up to a series of national corporations representing the principal divisions of national production, including the professions. These national corporations are joined together in a national council of corporations embodying all the economic interests of Italy—a sort of economic general staff. There is likewise a special ministry of corporations, which is a department of the Fascist State and serves as liaison between it and the corporate hierarchy.

Meanwhile, each corporation deals with every problem peculiar to itself, sometimes delegating its authority to intermediate provincial bodies. One of their chief duties is to regulate and confirm all labor contracts between workmen and employers according to the model contracts recognized by each corporation. Thus, every such contract is public, and must conform to the standard set up in the model contract—somewhat as, with us, business usages are assumed to conform to NRA codes. By Italy's contractual system every workingman as well as every employer has a definite legal status in the national system, and has legal redress before special courts in case of contractual breaches or disputes as to interpretations.

Other phases of the corporate system are the intercorporate committees, provincial as well as national, designed to consider matters affecting simultaneously various branches of the nation's economic life.

• • • •

SO much for the system's economic aspects. Its "political" aspect (if we may use that old-fashioned word!) is the Corporate Chamber, which replaces the former Chamber of Deputies. This chamber is elected, but not in the way that we elect Congress. All Italy is deemed a single constituency, and every voter must cast his ballot for a bloc of no less than 400 candidates.

This is really a nation-wide vote of confidence in the Government—somewhat like Hitler's recent plebiscite. One of the reasons is that those candidates had previously been selected by the Fascist Grand Council out of a roll of 800 names sent up to it by the various National Corporations. Once the voters accept the Grand Council's list of candidates, these constitute the membership of the Corporate Chamber and hold office for five years.

As already remarked, they are really technical experts, selected by the various corporations to represent their interests in the national economy. And, of course, capital and labor are supposed to balance throughout. For instance, there are peasant representatives in proportion to landlords; seamen and shipowners, steelworkers and masters, and so forth.

The chamber does not make laws or try to express the wishes of the voters. Its function is to consider all matters laid before it by the Fascist government for expert examination, discussion and recommendation. Furthermore, the chamber has the right to formulate any proposals within its province that it sees fit, and to lay these before the government with appropriate recommendations.

• • • •

BECAUSE the chamber has no direct political power, most foreigners think that it is a mere sham, or at most a sort of rubber-stamp for Mussolini. That, however, is not true. The chamber does not hesitate to discuss, criticize and amend the measures which the government lays before it. This, however, is done by members acting as individuals and out of their technical knowledge.

Debates in the chamber consist usually of short speeches, entirely devoid of oratory, delivered with no political end in view, and often so technical that the average layman can barely understand what the speakers are driving at.

Of course, in the Fascist state, all executive and legislative powers are lodged with the "chief of the government," Benito Mussolini, who also has the title of prime minister, and with the Fascist grand council. There is, to be sure, a senate, composed of various high dignitaries, including the princes of the royal House of Savoy. But this holdover from the old regime seems to be chiefly for decorative purposes.

Such, in brief, is the unique political system which Italy has been building up during the past 12 years.

Paradise Found

From the accounts of the jubilant correspondents who accompanied the jubilant President on his trip to Warm Springs it is apparent that their finding of the electric plant at Tupelo, Miss., was something like the success that finally crowned Ponce de Leon's search for the spring of eternal youth. Hardly more than once in a lifetime do our front pages breathe of so much enthusiasm as they have breathed since Mr. Roosevelt left on his jaunt.

BARGERON

Our own correspondent and his colleagues assure us that Tupelo was the climax, that when the presidential train pulled away from there the members of the party, including Secretary Ickes (who is not usually so demonstrative) made no effort to conceal their joy. And Mr. Roosevelt, who started out at Harrodsburg, Ky., by comparing himself, in effect, with Daniel Boone, literally boiled over with confidence.

There seems little doubt that we stay-at-homes have missed something this time. It was no ordinary presidential trip.

• • • •

We will simply have to draw on our imagination to get at what was responsible for this feeling of elation on the part of the President and everybody on the train. The World Almanac tells us nothing about Tupelo at all. It is not even listed and that book records them down to 5,000 population. In fact, when I last knew Tupelo, that is just about how big it was, just about 5,000.

Manifestly there is nothing about a town that size that would throw a whole presidential party into the jitters of delight. We must try to read between the lines of the newspaper boys' stories—not alone of the visit to Tupelo, but of the whole trip.

It seems that the party had spent a day or more wandering around over the Tennessee Valley, visiting the magnificant, tremendous and awe-inspiring Norris, Wheeler, and Wilson Dams and that their imaginations had been pretty highly worked up. Tons of machinery, tons of stone, cascading tons of water. Man's harnessing of a stream—that is the way the story books and orators describe it. Man making water do his work! Man the master!

A waterpower project is a grand sight and those in the Tennessee Valley are no small projects. They are inspiring. There at Norris Dam tears came into the eyes of Senator Norris when atop a high prominence he viewed the result of his legislative handiwork with Mr. Roosevelt a couple of years ago. It is easy to understand why on this trip, with the projects in the greatly advanced stage, Mr. Roosevelt and the members of his party, including the newspaper boys, should be impressed.

• • • •

But what is difficult to understand is why the outburst of enthusiasm came at Tupelo. Here it was that Mr. Roosevelt exclaimed joyously that it is a yard-stick, it is a yard-stick, and according to the newspaper boys, called excitedly for them so they might hear the good news. The people of Tupelo knew all about their little electric plant, he agreed, but he wanted the newspaper boys to know about it. So in the presence of the cheering populace he read them a report from Mr. Lilenthal, one of the TVA heads, saying the plant was now grossing $8,000, though the news reports did not say over what period.

From all of this carrying-on we stay-at-homes must conclude that after the party had wandered around through the valley looking at the dams, that someone asked if they would work, and that Mr. Lilenthal then said: "Oh, yes, come on up to Tupelo and you can see there the electricity pouring right out of the mill."

When the party got there and saw this was actually the case, that from all those vast projects they had already seen, here was the finished product, their enthusiasm knew no bounds.

But, gosh, didn't they expect it to work? It is a well known and long established fact that if you pour water over wheels sufficiently to turn them they will, in turn, operate turbines which, in turn, generate electricity.

New Faces in the Senate— "Vic" Donahey of Ohio.

Newcomer Bears Greatest Vote-Getting Name in All His State.

By Walker S. Buel,
Washington Correspondent and Associate Editor, Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"DONAHEY" is the greatest vote-getting name in the history of Ohio politics. The same people who began voting for Vic Donahey more than 20 years ago, who elected him Auditor of State for eight years, and made him the only governor in the State's history to serve three successive terms, have welcomed him back after nearly six years of private life.

They swung their hats again for their hero of old, "Honest Vic, the Watch-dog of the Treasury," and in the recent election Donahey, a Democrat, led the ticket just as he used to do. He was elected United States Senator over Senator Simeon D. Fess, an outstanding and nationally-known Republican, by a plurality of more than 400,000 votes.

The new Ohio Senator is 61, large and two-fisted, a product of the green hills of rural Tuscarawas County, where his Scotch-Irish ancestors became humble, respectable farmers 130 years ago.

• • • •

THE rocks and rills of Ohio got a great thrill last summer, when it was announced Donahey would run for the Democratic senatorial nomination. Politicians got a thrill, too, of a different kind. But back to the brush, into the hills and through the valleys the announcement ran, as a rallying call to people who wear whiskers, who have hard hands, who wear jeans and work in fields, who live in little towns. They told themselves they must not fail to get to the polls at this election, for "Vic" was a candidate again.

They knew Vic said in his campaign leaflets, "I will not pose as an intellectual giant." But they remembered he began his long career in State office by smacking down tax spenders and blue-penciling oversized expense accounts, which was the kind of giant they wanted. They had a notion that as a Senator he would consider things in an independent, unpretentious, homespun manner.

That was not quite the case with many Democratic leaders, some of them of high degree. Also to some of the so-called bosses, or organization leaders in metropolitan areas, Donahey, is a pain in the neck. They say they lose when they win, with Vic. If a machine-controlled convention system prevailed in Ohio, it is doubtful whether he could be nominated for anything. But the primary protected him long ago, after politicians had their first experiences with him and began hoping for a dirty, dark night. It has helped him now to return to office.

• • • •

HIS latest campaign was unusual. He was opposed in the primary by a New Deal 100 per cent candidate, Representative Charles West, who had the blessing of some of the important Democrats of the State; and by Gov. George White. In this three-cornered contest Donahey announced he would accept no campaign contributions during the primary campaign, because they often implied obligations; that he would have no campaign manager and no crowd of paid workers.

He sat in his Columbus office, where he has headed an insurance business since retiring from the governorship in 1929, and waited for the votes to roll in, which they did. He was nominated over his two opponents. He spent possibly $300 in the primary campaign. It is doubtful whether in the election campaign he spent more than $3,000.

Formally, his name used to be written A. Victor Donahey, and then A. V. Donahey. But the State named him Vic long ago, and finally he accepted that name, signing his own campaign literature in that fashion. He began political life as a township clerk; thereafter he was county auditor. He first came to Statewide notice as a member of the fourth Ohio State constitutional convention, and the Democrats in 1912 named him for State auditor. That first nomination came from a State convention, and his story might have been different if the primary system had not succeeded the convention system. For almost from the beginning, some of the organizations found he would not play ball with them, accused him of ingratitude and called him many names; all of which enhanced his reputation back in the hills.

He was State auditor until 1920, when he ran for Governor, meeting defeat in the Harding landslide, but running 120,000 votes ahead of his ticket. He was elected Governor in 1922, reelected in 1924, even in the face of the Coolidge victory, and elected again in 1926. Before the Democratic national convention of 1928 he was discussed as a Presidential possibility, but not by the political leaders who dominated the selection of the slate of Ohio delegates.

VIC DONAHEY.

WHEN Donahey finished with the governorship early in 1929 he said he was "broke," after 28 years in public life, and that he was through with political office. He showed a bank account of slightly more than $6,000, representing savings of $1,000 a year for six years from his salary of $10,000 a year as Governor, which Donahey said he had accomplised by "wearing cheap clothes and economizing in every possible way." For the Donaheys are a large family; the new Senator has four daughters and six sons. Mrs. Donahey and one of the daughters are expected to accompany him to Washington.

The story of his political success and his political philosophy has its origin in the grass roots of his rural home county. There he spent his boyhood with two brothers, James Harrison Donahey, cartoonist of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and William Donahey, artist on the Chicago Tribune.

• • • •

DONAHEY made a record of saving money for the taxpayers in the State auditor's office, and he knew how to publicize that performance. When a State official's expense account showed 20 or 30 cents for a baked potato at a big hotel. Auditor Donahey computed how much the Ohio farmer was getting for potatoes by the bushel, blue-penciled that item in the expense account and made it a piece of news. For every critic who said this was small-time business, there were countless voters in cracker-box conferences at crossroads stores who gave it big-time rating and showered praise on Donahey. Donahey's economy became a legend when one official sued regarding an expense account.

He battled against "sinister" lobbying at Columbus. As Governor he swung a veto axe over a Republican Legislature, vetoed every bill which proposed to increase State taxes, and made an all-time record of 122 vetoes. He said if there had been time to study more bills in detail, there would have been more vetoes.

• • • •

As a new senator, he probably will be, first of all, a good listener, and wait to get the feel of the place. He is not given to much speechmaking, and will not send speeches to his constituents except in response to individual requests. As to principles and policies, he said in his campaign:

"I am for the New Deal and a square deal for all and will honestly support the President."

Davis, At Large

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

ROBERT H. DAVIS is one of the most interesting men in America. He was born in Nebraska, went to school in Nevada, where he served for a time as compositor in a newspaper office, worked as a reporter in San Francisco, came East, has had a long and varied experience in journalism, and for some years has been writing a highly interesting column in the New York Sun. On September 13, 1926, he had an interview in Rome with Mussolini, and wrote about this with such skill that he received the extraordinary distinction of being made Honorary Life Member of the Staff of the Associated Press.

• • • • •

In addition to his professional journalistic work, he is one of the finest amateur photographers, especially with portraits. He has made large photographs of more than 800 prominent persons, and has collected many of them in a book with biographical notes.

His travels have taken him all over the world, and he has written a considerable number of books about these experiences. The latest one appeared a few weeks ago, and is called "Bob Davis, At Large," embellished with interesting photographs taken by the author.

• • • •

This book contains 86 chapters dealing with people, animals, and things he saw in Africa, Egypt, South America, Russia, Sweden, Finland, the Mexican Border, and at Sea. He is one of the best-trained observers alive; and has carried out the instructions given him when he first joined the staff of the Sun—"Don't stop until you've seen all there is of the globe."

Everyone who reads his books feels a sense of intimacy with the author; it is as if we were travelling together amid all these exotic scenes. For Davis has never become callous by experience; he is fresh-eyed, fresh-hearted, enthusiastic, loveable.

He is a cheerful traveller and never seems to think how much better everything is done at home. He takes everything as it comes and enjoys it. You will find him the best of company.

• • • •

Some years ago Davis, in collaboration with Arthur B. Maurice, wrote an intimate life of O. Henry, called "The Caliph of Bagdad," which brings the reader very close to that amazing genius.

To show how strong is the affection held for Mr. Davis by fellow-writers, during his slow convalescence from a terrible accident, his column was carried on by a large number of individuals, every one of whom regarded it as an honor to be asked to fill the role of "pinch-hitter." Yes, Fannie Hurst, that is exactly the way we all felt about it!

TVA Project Spells Doom of 'Power Trust'

Roosevelt Visit to Scene of Planning Experiment Reaffirms Aim to Press Program.

By Elliott Thurston.

AS a whole, the country has paid scant attention to the vast implications in the regional-planning venture now rapidly progressing under the Tennessee Valley Authority. On revisiting the scene of this first experiment on the grand scale, Mr. Roosevelt announced once more that his purpose is to extend similar development to "every State in the Union before we get through."

However orthodox the New Deal may profess to be, or may become, in other aspects, it is frankly committed to a completely changed order through the regional planning represented in the TVA development. This, in many ways, is the most radical side of the New Deal. And it is closer to Mr. Roosevelt's heart than almost any other policy or purpose.

Early in his 1932 campaign, Mr. Roosevelt said: "Each one of the four major power projects in the United States—the St. Lawrence River, in the Northwest; Muscle Shoals, in the Southeast; Boulder Dam, in the Southwest, and the Columbia River, in the Northwest—will forever be a national yardstick to prevent extortion against the public and to encourage the wider use of that servant of the people, electricity."

• • • •

ON his return from Hawaii last summer, Mr. Roosevelt visited and reemphasized his interest in the Western projects. Only recently he reiterated his intention of forcing the issue again on the St. Lawrence treaty. Now he has gone back, after two years, to see the progress made under TVA in the New Deal for the Tennessee Valley.

Significantly he paused at the Mississippi town of Tupelo, which at last accounts had a population of some 6,500 inhabitants. Tupelo is the first municipality to contract with TVA for all of its supply of electricity. It has entered into a 20-year contract with TVA to purchase electricity at a wholesale rate of 7 mills a kilowatt hour. This is a drastic reduction over the price which Tupelo paid under its contract with the private Mississippi Power Co. The mayor of Tupelo estimated that the TVA price would mean a saving of more than 67 per cent to domestic consumers.

On this basis, according to spokesmen for private power interests, competition with the Government is out of the question. Whether that is so, whether TVA accounting will be on a comparable basis so that a fair comparison can be made between costs of public and private operation, the fact stands out starkly that the "Power Trust" is doomed. Politically unpopular, private power interests stand little chance to survive against the drive by TVA which is to be extended to all ends of the country.

• • • •

THE Tennessee Valley program calls for far more than the "yardstick" with which to drive down private rates or else exterminate private companies. As Mr. Roosevelt said in his special message to Congress, on April 10, 1933, this project "if envisioned in its entirety, transcends mere power development," and "enters the field of flood control, soil erosion, afforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, and distribution and diversification of industry."

"In short," he added, "this power development of war days leads logically to national planning for a complete river watershed involving many States and the future lives and welfare of millions. It touches and gives life to all forms of human concerns."

The election served to intensify Mr. Roosevelt's purpose not only in the Tennessee Valley, but in the three other great power centers where a similar yardstick is contemplated. The power question best dramatizes what the purpose is. It leads, inevitably, to ultimate public ownership and operation of all power utilities. That is the objective for which the veteran Progressive and New Dealer, Senator Norris of Nebraska, has fought for the past decade. TVA is his dream coming true.

• • • •

NORRIS is the real inspiration behind the tremendous conception now bearing first fruits in TVA. His support of Mr. Roosevelt long before the 1932 conventions was based on this program. Both Coolidge and Hoover had pocket-vetoed the Norris bills to begin the great drive through Federal development of the wartime white elephant, Muscle Shoals. While he was Governor of New York, Mr. Roosevelt first began to share Norris' vision of Federal reformation of the power empire. He has not deviated from it since.

The public, occupied with other matters, has heard relatively little from TVA save ineffectual shrieks of dismay from the power interests. They know what Tupelo signifies. So does Mr. Roosevelt. As David E. Lilienthal, director of TVA, said last summer, "its implications extend to the outermost reaches of this country."

Exams For Policemen.

("Policemen take stiff examinations for lieutenancies." — News Item).

1. State whether the following statements, as made, are true or false:

It is permissible for a policeman to be within sight when he is really needed?

A policeman, upon taking down the facts in a robbery, may, if he so chooses, spell the names correctly and get the dates right.

After an automobile has stood two days and two nights beside a sign marked "No Parking," a policeman may, without being considered too hasty, tag the car.

2. What is wrong with this report made to the desk by a patrolman:

Two men have climbed up a fire escape and entered an office. They have bound and gagged the occupants, stolen several thousand dollars' worth of jewelry and escaped by forcing an operator to take them to the street in a freight elevator. The policeman's report reads: "Called to investigate a theft in office building. Looks like inside job. Story that the five thieves used an extension ladder and fled on horseback looks fishy."

Problems of judgment:

1. You are a motorcycle policeman. Four cars pass you doing 50 miles an hour. Two are costly limousines, one is a town car with a low number, the fourth is a 1928 flivver occupied by a shabby individual, obviously of no importance. Which car would you pursue?

2. You are called to a street fight between two men. One of them, badly beaten, you have never seen before. The other, unmarked, you recognize as the brother of a prominent political leader. Which of the two would you arrest, if either?

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

At 9:30 on a May evening 18 years ago, Admirals Jellicoe and Beatty led the entire available British grand fleet out into the cold, pitch-black North Sea—151 ships of war, including 28 dreadnaught battleships. The British admiralty had picked up a curious German fleet signal. Something, they thought, was up. By 10:30, this armada was at sea, steaming toward Denmark.

That same evening, half after midnight, the German high sea fleet put out from Wilhelmshaven under Admirals Scheer and Hipper—101 ships, including 16 dreadnaught battleships. By the move the Germans expected merely to draw some British forces into submarine ambuscades off the British coast. The high sea fleet steamed north toward the coast of Denmark.

Thus, in the early morning hours of May 31, 1916, 250 dreadnaughts, battleships, battle cruisers, light cruisers, destroyers and assorted men of war—the prime fighting fleets of Britain and Germany—pushed into a theater of operations no larger than Lake Superior. And each force advanced, believe it or not, in absolute ignorance that the other one was at sea.

The curtain went up on the greatest naval engagement of history, the Battle of Jutland.

I want to tell you that my cold chills and pulse-beat of excitement began about here, reading as dramatic a story, as masterfully told, as has ever kept my hair on end—"The Riddle of Jutland" (Coward-McCann, $4), by Langhorne Gibson and Vice Admiral J. E. T. Harper, Royal Navy, retired.

As a battle, Jutland was quite complicated enough without the mists of suppression which hid its facts for over 10 years, without the bitter controversy between the admirers of Jellicoe and of Beatty which caused that suppression. Before now, the truth has come out. But never so clearly and dynamically as in this book—aided by a score of diagrams, the authors bring Jutland before us plain as the side of a barn, far plainer than the combatants themselves understood it.

But if the "fog of war" is cleared for us, it was most decidedly thick for these battle-fleets, nearing each other at 40 miles an hour. Chance ruled these most efficient devices of man as if they were toys.

This, for example, after the battle was over. The rival fleets settled down for the night, cruising south in two long lines, roughly parallel. Jellicoe was on the east, hoping to keep the Germans from getting back to their port. But a combination of little flukes which speeded the Britons and slowed the Germans caused this astounding event to take place in the night—with the two southward courses converging, the entire German fleet crossed the wake of the British fleet but 15 minutes after the last British ship had passed. When morning came, the Germans were to the east, safely in sight of home.

• • • •

Yet one inspired decision of Jellicoe decided the battle. When, in the late afternoon melee, he chose to deploy on the left-wing column, his battle-line "crossed the T" of the oncoming German column—a wholly advantageous position in naval warfare. As a result of that, the authors tell us, Jutland was won for the British (though at terrific cost), and as a result of Jutland's keeping the German fleet off the North Sea, the great war itself was won.

Perhaps, in that last clause, we must allow for partisans of naval operations. But who can doubt that a German fleet harrying the British coast, and cutting England off from France, would not have altered the outcome of the war decisively?

History, say the authors, must award the palm to Jellicoe. Beatty was brave and dashing, but he blundered badly more than once.

Del Mars to Be Hosts At Dinner Tomorrow

Charge d'Affaires of Bulgaria and Mme. Petroff Tchomakoff Will Be Honor Guests at Function in Home on Belmont Road.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlos del Mar will entertain at dinner tomorrow night at their home on Belmont road for the Charge d'Affaires of Bulgaria and Mme. Petroff Tchomakoff. The official and Mme. Petroff are old friends of Mrs. del Mar, who knew them and the former's sister, Mlle. Marie Petroff, who is passing some time here, for Mrs. del Mar's former husband, the late Mr. Paul Lessinoff, was one-time Bulgarian charge here and later was Counselor of Legation in London.

The Del Mars' home is one of the most charming places in Washington. The drawing room has soft damask hangings, rich rugs, and a beautiful Louis XV cabinet in one corner which contains a collection of interesting things, among them some very lovely tiny lace fans, which are old and very rare, and a number of handsome "commands" to court presentations.

As Mme. Lessinoff, Mrs. Del Mar was presented at the Court of St. James and at the courts of Belgium, Holland and Bulgaria. In her own attractive way she tells interesting things of each court. In London the wives of foreign diplomats are indicated by a star, nothing else, in the diplomatic list, and after presenting his credentials, each diplomat is invited to attend one of the King's leeves. These occur in midwinter, about January at St. James Palace which is the residence of the present Prince of Wales. King George and the Prince of Wales receive the diplomats.

Short Wait at Palace.

No man is received at court until he has been "looked over" at one of the leeves by the King and Prince of Wales. Mrs. Del Mar was fortunate in not having to wait for hours in the long lines of motors which form at Buckingham Palace on the evenings of the presentations, for the Diplomatic Corps enters by the private entrance of the royal family. So she only waited a moment or two while a carriage drawn by four horses with footmen and lackeys deposited the Duchess of York.

The first to be presented was Lady Chamberlain, wife of the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Also present was the Marquesa Merry del Val, who at that time was doyenne of the corps. The marquesa had special permission to wear her lace mantilla in place of the three plumes which are a traditional part of court costume in honor of the Prince of Wales. The three plumes and the motto "Ich Dien" on the escutcheon of the Prince of Wales comes from Charles IV, who was the greatest of the Czech Kings.

Since the days of King Edward VII, the royal family has not gone into supper with diplomatic corps following the presentations, but at the Netherlands Court, Queen Wilhelmina, and the late Prince Consort did. The supper was served at small tables.

Leave In Grand March.

In Belgium, at a given time, their majesties left the ball room, followed by the Royal Prince and Princess (the present King and Queen), and their suite, with the entire diplomatic corps, in a grand march. After the buffet supper, the King and Queen and their guests left in the same manner. In less than half an hour, the procession again entered the supper room followed by the Belgian Cabinet members. These incidents and many more, Mrs. del Mar explained as she showed to the interested guest in her home, the handsomely embossed cards of invitation to these court functions.

On Sunday afternoon, the Charge d'Affaires and Mme. Petroff entertained at an informal tea for a large group of their friends, many of whom had not yet met the delightful sister of the official. The Petroffs are now occupying the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Perot, who are making their home in New York. It is a handsome house of stone on Twenty-ninth street, and inside there are innumerable interesting and beautiful things.

The great high-ceilinged living room has a huge stone fireplace, and many of the furnishings show Spanish or Italian influence. Grills of hand-wrought iron form the doors which open into the dining room and out onto the terrace. On Sunday a fire cracked in the hearth, and there was profusion of autumn flowers in silver and bronze vases.

Mme. Petroff did not receive her guests formally, but was in the dining room mingling with her guests, and apparently enjoying the party as much as anybody. She wore a black crepe frock trimmed with a collar and jabot of white crepe threaded with gold. Mlle Petroff, who is lady-in-waiting to Queen Giovanna of Bulgaria, was in a black frock with a blouse of deep red brocaded with tiny gold figures. She is blonde, and charming with a delightful sense of humor, and is enjoying her visit in Washington immensely.

Bristols Among Guests.

Among the guests were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol. Their years spent in Constantinople, when Admiral Bristol was United States High Commissioner, increased their large number of friends.

On Sunday, the new Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy, Maj. Henry Frank Heywood, and Mrs. Heywood were present. They have just come from Sophia, where they also knew the Petroffs, and are at Wardman Park Hotel until they find a house.

Maj. Heywood was in Turkey when the Bristols were there, so Sunday's party was almost a reunion. Mr. and Mrs. del Mar were present, and pretty Mrs. H. O. Chalkley, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy. Mrs. Francis A. Whitten, wearing a black suit, and a smart black hat, with a huge shoulder cape of silver fox, was the outstanding smart person that afternoon, as she is generally. The Princess de Ligne, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Belgium, wore a black costume, as did Mme. Ratib, beautiful wife of the Minister of Egypt. Mme. Ratib's black costume was relieved by a scarf of bright green taffeta shot with silver.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Marie McIntyre with her brilliant performance in "A Murder Has Been Arranged," has aroused in many members of the set a very keen interest in dramatics. And from soft little whispers, I have been hearing, it won't be long before that most congenial trio, Kay Pearson, Meg McMullen and Mary Win Brown, will be on the right side of the footlights.

The other night I met Eileen Register, who possesses large blue eyes and who will make her debut next year in Savanah. She is a happy addition to our circle, and we are all trying to make Washington just a bit more appealing than that attractive city of the South, and who knows, maybe the bow will be made here.

I wonder if Peggy Nolley is by any chance a member of the Gray Ladies. She should be—the other morning she strolled into the Mayflower attired in a symphony of pearl gray. From the top of the crown of her smart turned-up-brim gray velvet hat which matched her frock to the tips of her gray suede pumps, she was unusually chic.

New Coiffures From London To Be Shown

Short Hair Will Be Most Popular Style, Dermott Predicts.

By Katherine Smith.

(During the absence of Miss Ruth Anne Davis, her column is being written by Katherine Smith.)

TODAY, at 2:30 o'clock, a famous hair expert, Dermott, of London, will give a fashion display in a downtown store. Fifteen styles of hairdress, ranging from sports to very formal evening, will be shown by live models. Some of these coiffures will be displayed with hats, since they are particularly designed to accompany headgear.

Dermott is of the opinion that short hair will be the most popular style. He predicts a greater number of bobbed-haired ladies, so, if you plan to cut, see the display first, consult the expert and you're sure to have a becoming style.

He will be in town until the end of next week and will be on hand to advise. Consultations (free) should be made by appointment.

Cologne in Raffia Cases.

Now they're doing up cologne in raffia cases, like the champagne bottles used to christen a ship. This lovely lavender scented stuff comes in bottles of various sizes, all covered with woven raffia. They'd be just the right size to slip into the toe of a stocking—provided your family still adheres to the old-fashioned custom.

Vases and Ashtrays.

One store has a lovely collection of cloisonne, vases, cigarette boxes, ash trays, match box covers and assorted sizes of little dishes. One set, a fat little vase with a lid (for cigarettes), a round ash tray and a match box holder, costs a little over a dollar. The background is black; bright colors lined in gold cover the surface.

Others are decorated with a gorgeous blue-green shade, others in burnt orange. One long, slim vase, suitable for one, two, but seldom more than three flowers, is only 75 cents.

Desk Accessory.

The latest desk accessory—a set of tiny books, all boxes, filled with paper clips, rubber bands, thumb tacks and other necessities! The books, all different colors, come in a little case and would be charming on the desk top. Usually such items must be carefully hidden, or your desk looks as if you'd moved your office into your home.

Penguin Glasses.

Penguins are getting more and more popular. This time their images are etched on some charming old-fashioned glasses. The glasses are clear crystal, the penguins soft and cloudy looking. Other sized glasses carry the same peculiar bird, so you can have several sets.

Silver Salad Server.

Silver is always a good Christmas gift and always appreciated. One store has a little salad server, a bowl-shaped spoon and fork put together like a big pair of scissors. Slip your thumb and fingers into the handles, spread them apart and bring them together, and your salad is dished up as daintily as you please. This server is only $1.50. Its design is so simple it would fit in with almost any set.

Modern Cigarette Box.

Here's another special gift. A long wooden cigarette box, with four compartments for as many brands, initialed in gold or silver, is only $1. The boxes are in a light wood, resembling walnut, or black, like ebony. The letters are thick and squat, very smart. A box of this sort, with the receivers' initials on it, would be a thoughtful and personal present.

Complete Manicure Set.

A complete manicure set, put out by a widely-known cosmetician, and fitted into a little round red leatherette box, is something that will delight the feminine heart. The box is beautifully lined, and contains polish and polish remover, cuticle remover and cuticle cream, scissors, orange stick and an emery board. She'll love it.

Roll Top Boxes.

Have you seen these new boxes whose tops roll away like the old roll top desks? The rolling part is a composition, in various colors and combinations of colors; the framework is chromium. One of these is a combination of two roll top compartments, with a central section, also covered, containing a set of several tiny ash trays.

Here's the secret of their success. They're appropriate for desk or bureau, to hold cigarettes, powder, cosmetics, pins, jewelry, or almost anything.

You can get them with all white or all black tops, in combinations of green and black, red and black, black and white, etc. Also, you can get them in various sizes for various uses.

Florentine Cocktail Spikes.

Cocktail spikes go Florentine. They're like tiny forks, and if they aren't handmade, they certainly look it. Best of all, they are a little dulled, or maybe oxidized, and look as if they dated back to the Renaissance. Delicate little carvings decorate the handles, the prongs of the forks are slightly splayed, making them daintily graceful.

Call Katherine Smith, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Child Chats

Let Children Help Plan Vacation Parties; Games Are Suggested.

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THANKSGIVING holidays offer a splendid opportunity for entertaining. As well as the fun a party affords, planning it offers occupation during vacation days, if you will let the children help.

The old game of pasting advertisements on cardboards, for guests to guess the name of the product represented by each one, is always entertaining. Or, instead, draw up a list of well-known slogans, give each guest a copy and award a prize to the one who names correctly the greatest number of articles represented.

If the guests are friends of long standing, collect in advance a "baby" picture of each one and make a guessing game of identifying the photographs. If they are relative strangers, asking them to come in costume, announcing prizes for the best, always helps to break the ice.

For young children, instead of pinning the tail on a donkey, arrange to pin the stem on a pumpkin or the head on a turkey gobbler.

For older boys and girls, an obstacle race provides hilarious moments. For this old favorite, strew stacks of books, a glass vase, cushions, chairs and other items around the room. Select one guest, who does not know the game, to be "it." He is allowed a moment to look over the array of obstacles before being blindfolded, then told he must walk around the room, stepping over them all without touching any of them. When he is blindfolded, but before he starts his walk, all the articles are quietly removed from the floor. His attempts to step high and grope his way about when the floor is perfectly clear are certain to be entertaining.

Recipe Given For Old Style Meringue Pie

Hot Water Always Used in Preparation of Meat Stew.

By Dorothea Duncan.

SOMEONE has requested a recipe for the kind of lemon meringue pie that grandmother used to make—just eggs for thickening, no cornstarch to flour. Here it is:

Old-Fashioned Lemon Meringue Pie.

3 eggs
Grated rind of ½ lemon.
2-3 cup sugar
¼ cup lemon juice.
2 tablespoons water

Beat eggs slightly, add sugar, grated rind, lemon juice and water. Place ingredients in an unbaked pie shell and bake for 10 minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees F.). Lower heat to moderate (350 degrees F.) and continue baking for 40 to 45 minutes. Cool pie slightly, cover with meringue and bake at a moderate temperature until delicately browned.

Today we are answering as many queries as possible.

Brown sauce and kitchen bouquet are entirely different products. Brown sauce is one made from milk or water or brown stock and thickened with browned flour or part browned and part plain flour or corn starch. Kitchen bouquet is a combination of beef extract and condiments and is used in small quantities to give color and flavor to soups, gravies and sauces. It is commonly used to change a white sauce to a brown one.

Following is a good recipe for hot milk sponge cake.

Hot Milk Sponge Cake.

4 eggs
1½ cups granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup boiling water or 1 cup of scalded milk
2 cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt

Beat eggs until thick and lemon-colored; add sugar gradually and beat well after each addition. Add vanilla and boiling water or milk slowly. Continue beating about two minutes. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together. Sift into first mixture and fold from bottom up. Bake in ungreased tube pan in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about one hour. Invert cake in pan and let stand until cold. Makes one 10-inch cake.

Following is a recipe for honest-to-goodness buckwheat cakes.

Buckwheat Cakes.

1-3 cup fine bread crumbs
2 cups scalded milk
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cake yeast dissolved in
½ cup lukewarm water
1¼ cups buckwheat flour
1 tablespoon molasses
¼ teaspoon soda dissolved in
¼ cup lukewarm water

Pour milk over crumbs and soak for 30 minutes. Add salt, dissolved yeast cake and buckwheat to make a batter thin enough to pour. Let rise overnight. In the morning, stir well, add molasses, soda and water, and cook as follows: Heat griddle or frying pan and grease slightly. Drop mixture from tip of spoon on griddle. Cook on one side. When puffed, full of bubbles, and cooked on edges, turn and cook on other side.

Which is best to use for making meat stew, hot or cold water?

Hot water is always used for cooking stewing meat because the heat of the water will coagulate the protein of the outer layer of meat and thus retain the juices of the meat in the process of stewing. Stewing meat is often seared in hot fat before it is added to the stew pan and boiling water. This is another method of preserving the juices of the meat.

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 20 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 9:45 to 11:45 p. m.

This November 20 should be an excellent day for the favorable adjustment of financial problems, especially in cases requiring compromises. Married and engaged couples, as well as those eager to tell or hear a tale of devotion, will be wise not to in any way deviate from the truth.

If a woman, and November 20 is your birthday, anything of an artistic nature should have a strong appeal for you.

An abundance of money may eventually bring you the things for which you have always wished. Art, literature, educational lines, interior decorating or designing offer one of your temperament opportunities for advancement if taken up seriously. Marriage might offer you a haven of safety from worldly cares and tribulations.

If a man and November 20 is your natal day, if you will avoid doing things by rule of rote and let your work show evidence of self-expression, recognition of your natural ability will, in all likelihood, be gained. You should prove to be a big money maker.

How to Keep Well

Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Relaxation and Repose.

"THOU must be like a promontory of the sea, against which, though the waves beat continually, yet it both itself stands, and about it are those swelling waves stilled and quieted."
—Marcus Aurelius.

One often hears the expression, "If only I could rest." Those who give soulful utterance to such a remark represent an all too large group of "self-exhausters." We are aware that tenseness of the mind reflects itself in rigidity of body muscles and in order to permit the body to relax the mind must be at rest. It is easy to tell the neurasthenic not to worry, but when we attempt to apply the formula to ourselves we encounter difficulty.

The first formula in securing repose is to eliminate tangible troubles. To achieve this end it may be that financial sacrifices will have to be made, and that will power will need to be exerted to the utmost. If income does not equal outgo a readjustment of the mode of living is necessary. Reconstructing one's plan of life may be required. After every possible effort has been made to eliminate actual and remedial anxieties and worries, then and then only is the individual in position to successfully conquer imaginary and intangible worries.

Much may be done by training the body in relaxation. Try sitting perfectly still in a comfortable chair with the eyes closed, not lifting a finger, and with the feeling that every muscle is at rest. Just "flop" into a chair and stay there. Gradually increase the time spent in this way. Perhaps at first one will not remain quiet for more than a minute. From time to time lengthen this period until 10 to 15 minutes or more of absolute and complete relaxation is secured.

The habit of repose can be acquired.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

Jocelyn Crane has accepted the offer of wealthy friends, the Oliver Keenes, to go abroad with them, leaving her young husband to struggle with a floundering advertising business. A friend of Ollie's, named Carrie Franks, has stolen letters written to Rita by Prince Glazanoff. Jocelyn tries to retrieve them for her friend and in a scuffle with Carrie, a string of pearls, loaned to her by Mary Derby, a friend of her husband, has been broken, and some of the gems are lost. Mary cables Jocelyn that she wants the pearls back, asking her to deliver them to the Marsdens, who are on a trip abroad. Prince Glazanoff mentions a man who copies jewels perfectly, and Jocelyn determines to have the remaining pearls matched, returning the imitations until she can get enough money to repay the price of the originals. Meanwhile, wealthy Ogden Temple is showering attention on Jocelyn.

"WHY, LYNN — what on earth for?" Rita stopped with a short laugh. But her quick mind told her at once. That necklace, of course, about which Jocelyn had been so mysterious. She must find out about it. Useful bit of information. Jocelyn was getting a bit out of hand——

Jocelyn never knew how she got away from Glazanoff and Rita, to the hotel for what was left of the necklace, into the small cluttered apartment where Count Naderlyn, a thin taciturn man with beautiful hands, discreetly received his customers.

"These are fine but not unusual, Madame," he assured Jocelyn after a close examination of what was left of Mary Derby's pearls. "Worth possibly two thousand of your dollars, depending on the market. If you wish to use the clasp, I can duplicate this necklace so perfectly that only a connoisseur would know. And even then—without the test—I have puzzled experts." He shrugged his shoulders.

"I have very little money," Jocelyn said faintly. "And I would like them right away."

"You are a friend of Glazanoff's," Naderlyn gave a suddenly charming smile. "He has telephoned me a few moments before you arrive, Madame. He sends me many clients. Therefore I am happy to serve you. The necklace will cost 500 francs and you shall have it tomorrow."

Pearls Delivered.

"You are very kind——" Then only did the nerves quiver in her voice.

Fearful that if she hesitated she might still change her mind, Jocelyn hurried to the Hotel France de Choiseul. There Mrs. Marsden had also had a cable. She was intensely curious.

"I didn't know Mary had a pearl necklace," she said. "Of course, I'll see that she gets it back safely." Her eyes traveled up and down from the Reboux hat slanted on Jocelyn's reddish brown hair, along her lovely profile, down the slim elegance of her yellow crepe. "I suppose you're having a very gay time with all your smart friends," she prodded on. "I'll tell Dick he would hardly know you, you're so chic."

Jocelyn smiled faintly, her distaste well masked. "Don't tell him that——"

Mrs. Marsden seemed to be making up her mind as slowly she walked to the door with Jocelyn. "Of course, it's none of my business, but if you ask me, the sooner you come home, the better," she said suddenly. "Dick is a very attractive man——"

An Invitation to Dine.

"Yes, isn't he? Give him my dearest love." Jocelyn held out her hand. "And thanks again for taking the pearls." With that she got away. Once on the street she felt strangely blank, empty. She had done a terrible, a criminal thing. "I had to do it," she told herself over and over again.

But it was only when she returned to the Georges V. that she realized what a strain she had been under. There was a message from Ogden Temple. He would call for her at 8, hoping that she could dine with him. And this time, Jocelyn decided to go. Why not? Money—money—money. It rang through her head like cymbals clashing. Lack of money had sent her from Dick. Lack of money had forced her to resort to trickery. Yes, she would go out with Temple. Anything to forget.

Luxury Was Pleasant.

In Temple's beautifully appointed car, she sat quietly, letting the moments flow through her. In the lights and shadows gliding by she was conscious of the implacable strength of this huge, ugly man whose searching blue eyes under craggy brows gave no quarter.

Everything smoothed out before Ogden Temple like a velvet carpet unrolling, leading to where he wished to go. A restaurant she didn't know, with a hush over it that went with perfect service, supreme cuisine and wines reserved for epicures.

Jocelyn sank back grateful. "This is nice!" She sipped her sherry. She tasted the delicate consumme, listening to Temple's deep voice with a sense of being lulled. He spoke of his sculptures, then he said something that drew her up with a quickening of her heart.

"I've been thinking for years about a figure I want to do," he was saying. "But no woman I have ever met before filled my idea of a model—until I met you. There is nothing I would not offer you if you would pose for me."

"What is it—tell me——" Jocelyn heard herself asking.

"The mightiest force in the world," he answered gravely. "Faith. Faith wearing the mantle of plenty, girdled with fruits and flowers, crowned with stars, and holding the earth in the hollow of her hand."

"You would offer me anything to pose for you?" Jocelyn's voice was low.

His great shoulders, the thick ledges and planes of his face overshadowed the lights, the crystal, the rusty red of old burgundy in the glass he held.

"Yes," he repeated. "Anything."

Jocelyn's thoughts flew to Naderlyn. Two thousand dollars, he had said Mary Derby's necklace was worth.

"Will you pay me two thousand dollars?" Her voice was suddenly very clear and her beautiful face hardened as she waited for his answer.

And Back at Home——

How could it ever have occurred to Mary Derby that the beautiful necklace, her only inheritance, that Lena Marsden brought back from Paris in answer to Mary's cable to Jocelyn, was a brilliant imitation! Not the same pearls she had lent to Jocelyn Crane some weeks before.

But the causes leading up to Jocelyn's deception would have been beyond her imagination, had anyone told them to her. Not that Mary, since her unhappy divorce, had ever trusted—or expected to be trusted—by women.

If it hadn't been for the William Marsden's home-coming party, she wouldn't have wanted to wear the pearls. They were dedicated in her mind as the source of the money she had pledged to invest in Dick's business. But here arose the occasion and the temptation to show Dick what she could look like in a soft gown—and pearls. And beneath her trim boyish office manner, a wistful spirit ventured in Mary, seeking a man like Dick. A home.

On the afternoon of the party, Lena Marsden delivered the necklace. She felt Mary owed her full confidence—which was one of the things Mary never gave to anyone. How and why, Lena wanted to know, had these pearls reached Jocelyn?

A Gossipy Cat.

"It was rather queer, don't you think," Lena Marsden sniffed, "meeting her at that place our hotel porter sent us to for Bohemian atmosphere? And if that was Mr. Keene she was with, he looked very dissipated to me." Lena was sharp with resentment for what she considered Jocelyn's snubs in Paris.

Bill and Dick were busy in the kitchen, preparing cocktails before they went upstairs to dress for the party. Lena's penetrating voice drilled through the thin stuccoed walls of the sitting room, through yellow damask portieres with the twiggy Napoleon wreathes on them.

"And Chandler Morris—he came back with us, you know—said he saw her dining alone with that extraordinary Ogden Temple." Lena's face beaked over a bowl of roses she was arranging. "One of the richest men in the world, they say. And one of the most unscrupulous. Any woman seen with him is doomed—that is, her reputation——" Lena pinched off a loose petal.

"Jocelyn's just having a good time. Who wouldn't?" Mary had seen Bill winking and scowling a warning between the curtains. He blew in now with a roar and clatter to drown his wife's incurable babble.

Thick Strings Produce Dull Tones of Viola

GEORGE WARGO, first violinist in the National Symphony Orchestra, which The Post will present in a series of children's concerts, early in December.

Instrument Often Called on for Special Effect in Orchestras.

This is the second of a series of articles on the instruments of the orchestra. School students are urged to clip them for scrapbook material, in preparation for the children's concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra which The Post will present early in December.

THE VIOLA is exactly like the violin, except that it is one-fifth larger and has heavier strings. It is tuned a fifth below the violin, its strings thus giving C, G, D and A, the deepest tone being an octave below middle C on the piano.

The viola is played in a manner similar to that used for the violin, except for the greater stretches in fingering, due to the greater length of the strings.

The dull, mournful tone of the viola comes from the fact that its strings are thick. The extra depth is attained by increasing the thickness of the strings, which always makes the tone less brilliant. Thus, the viola gets a tone color of brooding melancholy.

The viola plays the third part in the string quartet, which consists of a first and second violin, a viola, and a violoncello. This does not mean that it always below the two violins in pitch, for the string quartet depends upon interest and variety in the leading of its four parts, and sometimes the viola may be playing the highest note of a chord.

In orchestral work the viola has much the same duty. It is often called upon for its special tone color, but usually it is found playing in four-part harmony with the first and second violins and violoncellos. In the eighteenth century its role was more humble, and it was often compelled to follow the bass viol.

The Post concerts will be given in Eastern, Western, McKinley and Armstrong High Schools, the dates to be announced.

Tomorrow: The 'cello.

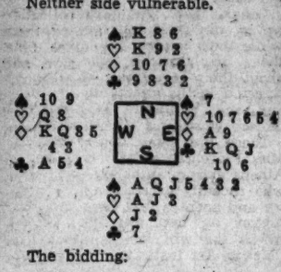
A Slip and a Squeeze.

The defense can quite frequently get out of a squeeze play by the simple procedure of removing early in the hand potential squeezing cards from the declarer's or dummy's hand. For instance, if you play a high card, even though you know the declarer is going to ruff the trick, you may at the same time be removing from the dummy a low card which subsequently could cause you much difficulty. It was the failure of East to make this play that enabled Mr. Walter Malowan on the hand below to fulfill a four-spade contract by obtaining a squeeze which gave him a perfect count on the hand.

East, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1♣	Dbl.	Redbl.	1◇
Pass	1♠	2◇	Pass
2♡	2♠	Pass	3♠
Pass	4♠	Dbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

West, on lead against the four-spade contract, decided to open a trump, not knowing that the dummy had no ruffing power anyway. The trump trick was won by South in his own hand and a club was now led. Although Mr. Malowan realized that his contract was surely home if the heart finesse worked, he decided not to take anything for granted but to play for every possibility. Admittedly, from the bidding East should have the heart Queen, but it would do no harm to first do a little checking. The club lead was won by East's ten-spot, and now East, by immediately shifting to diamonds and making it possible for three rounds of the suit to be played, could have removed the diamond ten, a possible squeeeezing card, from the dummy. However, East decided to continue with clubs. On the second lead of clubs Mr. Malowan discarded one of his two losing diamonds, thus making sure that three diamond leads could not be made.

East now did shift to the diamond Ace, and after being signalled by his partner, continued the suit; but Mr. Malowan trumped and proceeded to run all his spades. South now led out his last trump and West, being forced to keep a diamond, had to aid South in completing his count by discarding the club Ace. The diamond ten was discarded from dummy and East, being forced to keep a high club, had to drop one of his hearts. A low heart was led to the King and a low heart returned, East perforce playing the ten. Whereas at the beginning of the hand it seemed as though the East player was marked with the heart Queen, Mr. Malowan now knew differently. He knew that East's remaining card was the high club because of the squeeze which had resulted from the play of the last trump, and he accordingly knew that the heart Queen must now be blank in the West hand. So he went up with the Ace, dropping the Queen, and won the last trick with the Jack, thus fulfilling his doubled contract.

Had the defense earlier in the play played three rounds of diamonds, Mr. Malowan could still have guessed the hand correctly, but he would not have been certain. West would have been able to throw all his diamonds and keep the club suit covered as well as his two hearts, and South would never have been able to know surely whether East, who would have held on to three hearts, had the Queen.

Greece, Proud of Its Past, Looks to Future, Says Lecturer, Long a Resident of Athens

Women Active in Renaissance, Miss Dorothy Stone Declares

Many Entering Professions and Trades and Even the Field of Archaeology, She Reports, but They Keep Out of Politics.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE GREEK WOMAN who formerly sat at home, hands folded, waiting for a suitor does so no longer. Entering public life, she is discovering what's going on outside the four walls of her house and is carving an important niche for herself in the renaissance of a country virtually rising from the dead.

Greek men who prided themselves on their glorious lineage, while their country crumpled about them, are growing less concerned about their ancestors and more interested in the generations to come and the building of a modern Greece worthy of its heritage.

These are some observations of Miss Florence Stone, a resident of Athens and an authority on Greece, who recently arrived in this country and spent a few days in Washington on her way to Chicago, where she will lecture before the Chicago Art Institute.

Women's Role Important.

"Women are playing an important role in the rebuilding of Greece," Miss Stone said yesterday. "They have made amazing strides into public life since the war, and now, in increasing numbers, they are entering professions and trades. In Athens it isn't unusual to see women in law offices, and many women are conducting medical practices—and successful ones at that. Many, too, are professional guides, since the tourist trade is increasing year by year, and since so many Greek women are competent linguists.

"Others are teaching or doing translation work, while a large number are entering the field of archeology. Greece is, of course, the archeologist's Utopia.

"So far, however, women have not become interested in politics. This is because they are not allowed to vote and have as yet no active part in government. Therein lies the chief difference between the interests of Greek women and American women."

There are, of course, many women in Greece who confine their interests entirely to their home and their children, devoting their spare moments to social events and a study of Paris fashions, Miss Stone explained.

Paris Vogue Adopted.

"The vogue in Paris is the vogue in Athens," she said. "That's why so few women of Modern Greece are voluptuous. They work hard at keeping slender.

"Yet occasionally, I've noticed Greek women who are strikingly the sculptor's type. Strong featured, with straight noses and well-rounded figures, they are veritable Aphrodites.

"The average Greek woman isn't exactly beautiful—at least not from the American point of view, but her vivid coloring, well-set head and lovely throat makes her attractive and handsome, rather than pretty. Furthermore, a certain lofty serenity that characterized Helen of Troy—that is, the popular conception of her—may be noticed today in many Greek women."

Miss Stone observed that in the rural districts women worked with men in the fields.

"Greece is still mainly an agricultural country, about three-quarters of its population being occupied in raising grain, ollve trees, grapes, figs, oranges and other fruit, as well as tobacco and some cotton and rice," she said.

"The average rural woman arises at 3 o'clock, bundles up her children, locks up her house, and is then ready to go with her husband to a vineyard probably 5 miles away. There she will work in the fields with her husband until sunset and then return home for the evening meal."

Most of the 1,500,000 Greeks who were forced to leave Turkey in 1922 and were thrown back into their native country, however, have settled in the cities and show no inclination to become farmers, according to Miss Stone.

"The majority of the refugees were small-scale merchants," she said, "who had owned little shops in Istanbul and knew no other way of earning a livelihood. This type of refugee, being neither a creator nor a contributor, has burdened the resources of the country to the extent Greece could hardly have survived as a republic without the assistance of foreign countries, especially England and America."

There is still much unemployment, she pointed out, and the country is heavily in debt. In the face of this, Greece today can think very little about its artistic development and is more concerned with means of wresting itself from economic depression.

"Modern Greece is not an artistic nation," she said, "yet every native still thrills to the mention of the glorious past of his country, which laid down for the whole western world the foundations of the study of literature, art, philosophy and science.

Pride Instilled in Children.

"This pride is instilled in even the children of Greece. I remember seeing a little boy in Athens draw himself up proudly, beat his chest with his fist and cry, 'My country gave civilization to the world!' And I thought, as I heard him, what he needed most was a bath tub and plenty of soap!

"Having their eyes on the past for so long, Greeks have, perhaps, thought too much of their heritage and too little of the future. But now they are ceasing to be circumscribed by old ideals. The entire movement of the Greeks in the last few years has been a reversal of a long historical process. Whereas they were once dispersed to the four corners of the then-known earth, they are now being drawn back to a center. The development of this center will determine whether Greece ever becomes a strong nation."

Miss Stone is enthusiastic about the personality of the people she has known in Athens and in the outlying districts.

Greece Appeals to Intellect.

"They are very democratic," she said. "They are hospitable to a degree, simple in their living, and pleasant conversationalists. And their country! The beauties of Greece have never gained as much attention as they deserve.

"So much has been written and said of Italy's loveliness; yet Greece is far more beautiful. Italy appeals to the senses; Greece, to the intellect. Instant appreciation of Greece depends upon a knowledge of its heritage, its background."

Miss Stone, born near Boston, was educated in Geneva, Paris, Munich and Berlin. During the war she was a translator in the U. S. War Department, and later went abroad as a member of the Greek Commission. For many years she has been a resident of Athens, returning to the United States to lecture from time to time.

After lecturing before the Chicago Art Institute, she will return to Washington.

Although the woman of modern Greece is eager to adopt the latest Parisian fashions, Miss Florence Stone, resident of Athens, says one occasionally still sees Grecian women with all the grace and perfectly proportioned figures of the classical "sculptor's type." Factory Agent Recounts The Story of Spode China

By Katherine Smith.

THE STORY of Spode china is the story of patience, artistry, far-sightedness, skill and tradition. It is also the story of white English clay, of unbelievably high temperatures, of sensitive hands on a potter's wheel, of beauty, of color and bones.

Back in 1789 Josiah Spode, the first, made a formula and revolutionized a business. Today his formula has not changed; the present day Spode factory is run exactly the way it was hundreds of years ago.

Every Step Requires Care.

In a local china store Gresham Hassall, Spode representative, has under his wing a collection of this china, amounting in value to thousands of dollars. Five hundred patterns are on display. These are priced from $60 a dozen to $5,900. In addition Mr. Hassall has a table full of samples of clay, molds, copper plates and pictures of the factory.

He will tell you that only certain parts of oxen bones can be used for the china; that in only one section of England white clay can be found; that each step in the making of a china plate requires expert workmanship; that over 100,000 patterns have been made and all are on file in the factory.

He will pick up two plates, crash their edges together. You jump, expecting to see fragments on the floor. Instead the plates ring clearly and with musical tone.

"They are built to stand up," Mr. Hassall said, "of the finest materials, through the exact amount of baking.

"They are all temperamental like that. Left to themselves, they do good work, for they know they can not be replaced, that the industry will suffer without them. They take pride in their work, however, because they love it and because they are artists."

Some of Plates Signed.

Mr. Hassall has the intricacies of china making on the tip of his tongue. As clearly as though you were in the factory itself, you go from the mounds of clay, weathering in the sun and rain, to the giant vats where the clay is cut and thrashed into molding consistency, then to the man at the potter's wheel, his slim hands coaxing the clay into shape. You follow a china plate or bowl, to the "turner," where the surface is robbed of the potter's fingerprints, then into the ovens, where it bakes for many hours, and cools for more, to the woman who transfers the pattern, to the glazer, whose quick flick of the wrist removes all excess drops of liquid glass, into ovens again and again, to emerge a finished work of art.

You'll see plates made for Queen Victoria, Katherine of Russia, nobility of every country. You'll see delicate cameos on the "shoulders," birds whose plumage is luminous, designs that are Greek, or Italian, English or French, Chinese or classic. who made them.

Nowhere are ruins so romantic as in Greece, according to Miss Stone, resident of Athens. A view of the Temple of Athena, shown above, is typical of what one sees on the Acropolis, which in Miss Stone's words "presents untold beauties to the eye of one who has a knowledge of Greek architecture and Greek history."

Thanksgiving Dinner Is Planned for Lonely Persons in Capital.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Your column in The Post interests me very much, especially the letters from the lonely persons within our midst. Loneliness is agony at any time, but with Thanksgiving and the holidays approaching——!

Well do I remember a Christmas spent alone when I was a newcomer here. My courage was strong and I was determined not to allow myself to feel lonely, and it might have been possible to have kept that resolve, had it not been for the Christmas dinner. All the little friendly eating places were closed, so I went to a hotel. The dinner served looked lovely, but I could not eat.

• • • •

That was years ago. I am now established in my profession and have made many friends, but when the holiday season rolls around I remember that lonely feeling.

• • • •

Reading your column has given me an idea. Have a Strangers' Thanksgiving Dinner at one of our best hotels, to which not only newcomers, but any other persons who are lonely, may come. If a sufficient number of men and women want to make reservations, there can be music and dancing. No one need be lonely, and every one will meet new people. And from this beginning, that Strangers' Club, which has been suggested, may be developed.

• • • •

Therefore, Miss Haworth, if you think well of this idea, I shall be glad to assume responsibility for arranging such a dinner.

As the time is short, you may give my name and address, if you wish, but I must ask that all communications from those interested BE IN WRITING.

• • • •

In the meantime, I shall get rates and make tentative plans—for whether there be 6 or 60 people, we can have the dinner—in order that due notice may be given both through your column and individually, to all expressing a desire to attend this first Thanksgiving dinner for strangers in Washington.

INTERESTED.

Dr. Thompson's Idea.

DEAR INTERESTED: I congratulate you on this fine, thoughtful, practicable plan you have conceived for making Thanksgiving Day, 1934, a day for real thanksgiving among lonely persons in Washington. I think you demonstrate heart-warming sympathy, understanding and generosity in offering to assume responsibility for planning Washington's first "strangers' Thanksgiving dinner," which may, indeed, result in the organization of the oft-suggested Strangers Club in Washington.

• • • •

And now, may I say to the lonely persons in Washington that the woman to whom they are indebted for this kindly proffer is Dr. Grace A. Thompson, the Jefferson, Sixteenth and M streets northwest.

• • • •

I hope her kindly thought will not go begging for subscribers, and that the idea she has in mind may indeed develop into a dinner with music and dancing; into a delightful occasion where shy, lonely men and women may find in friendship the permanent cure for their sickness of soul; into the beginning, perhaps, of the hoped-for Strangers Club.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Bright Red Tint Adopted For Nails by French Women

Practice in Smart Set of Covering Entire Nail With Polish Brings Out Whiteness and Shapeliness of the Hands.

By Frances Mangum.

A PARISIAN tip on fingernails discounts the rumors of pale and colorless polishes. According to a recent census taken by foremost stylists, French women have discarded the bluish red tints only to adopt the bright reds with yellow and orange bases. Furthermore they are carefully matching these to their lip rouges.

The general practice in the smartest maisons de beaute is to cover the entire nail with polish. This rather startling innovation serves not only to dramatize the hands, but to bring out to the fullest their whiteness and shapeliness. If, however, the client requests a white tip it is added by a narrow strip of mother-of-pearl applied to accentuate the furthermost point. In some instances this is complemented by a half moon of mother-of-pearl at the base of the nail.

Adapted to Costumes.

The foremost polish shades, ruby, cardinal, coral and pomegranate are carefully adapted to the costumes which are not only brilliant but livish this season.

The popular gold metal cloth is stunning by contrast with the yellowish reds, silver cloth with coral, and fabrics which are mingled weaves of colorful and gleaming threads are beautifully brought out by these bright nail touches.

Matching nails and lips and blending these with costume colors give an effect of perfect grooming. As always harmonizing shades are a fine point of beauty, with the result its own reward.

Spain True to Tradition.

This recent nail survey extended likewise to Spain, where it seems the smartest women are remaining true to tradition. Deep shades are still preferred for lips and nails, and are tinted to match the costumes. In England, however, there is more interest in the lighter shades of carmine and rose, with ever so slight a trend toward natural for daytime.

In Hollywood, where the style pendulum is ever swinging to and fro, there seems to be a vogue for bright red nails matching the lips.

Fashion Proves Fickle, Adopting Peasant Trends

Success of Alpine and Cossack Hats Lead to Small Felt.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17 (AP).—Fickle fashion, which started the season completely regal in luxury of line and fabric, has made a quick turnabout and taken up with peasant trends.

The success of the Alpine and the Russian cossack's hats of early fall has led directly to the small felt peasant hat. It follows closely the line of the caps and headdresses worn on feast days by European country folk.

Worn back from the face, with turned up brims, these hats fit in admirably with the fur-collared coat. Some are draped high and ridged at the top like a folded kerchief. Others have head-fitting crowns with fluted, up-turned brims. The Dutch cap tape, flaring over the ears, makes a new frame for a pretty face.

Daytime dresses also show the influenee of peasant costumes. There is the mother hubbard yokeline and the smocked vestee front—both effective details for simple, wearable dresses of black or colored silk.

Full sleeves shirred into tight cuffs and full skirts like a peasant's, shirred into the waistline are other manifestations of the trend.

Cheerful and informal, the peasant styles add an unpretentious note to the medley of current fashion. After dark, however, they give way to a glittering pageantry, and the gold and silver cloth, and sparkling sequins seem doubly bright for the contrast.

Alpine and Cossack-inspired millinery is being superseded by jaunty, close-fitting hats like the one above, from Chanel's collection.

Moonshiners Ready to Aid 'Revenooers'

Join Treasury Agents in War on Huge Liquor Ring.

Grand Jury Is Told of Franklin County Bootlegging.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 19.—Moonshiners from the mountains of Franklin County, traditional enemies of the Government "revenooers" since Revolutionary days, aligned themselves tonight with Treasury agents in a war on a huge illicit liquor ring intended as an object lesson of the Government's determination to end bootlegging.

A grand jury reconvened today to hear strange stories of moonshiners held in virtual slavery, of corruption among officials charged with law enforcement—tales gathered by Federal operatives in 14 months of painstaking investigation.

"License" Fee Levied.

Starting in 1928, it was revealed, a bootlegging ring levied "license" fees of $10 a month on moonshiners, and organized the output of the individual stills into a major industry. They collected and transported hundreds of gallons of corn liquor, careening over mountain roads in swift automobiles.

Charles Carter Less, Franklin County's Commonwealth attorney, recently was accused in open court of accepting "protection" money. He denied the charge.

The grand jury is expected to examine more than 100 witnesses. Those familiar with conditions predicted a major state political scandal would ensue.

Richards Slain.

Some in the vicinity believe that Deputy Sheriff Thomas Jefferson Richards was slain last month to prevent the grand jury from hearing his story. He was killed by buckshot and revolver bullets on a mountain road while bringing a colored man to the Franklin County jail at Rockymount. The Negro also was slain, apparently in an attempt to prevent identification of the killers.

Treasury officials feel that if they can smash the bootlegging in the backwoods of Franklin County, it will be a warning to violators everywhere in the country.

Franklin County was cited in the Vickersham commission's report on prohibition in 1931 as the leading county in the Nation engaged in illegal distillation of liquor. For years its reputation as a center for bootlegging has been known, but the traditional reticence of the backwoodsmen has made any campaign against the moonshiners most difficult.

Virginia's Capitol Square

By Warren A. McNeill.
(Associated Press.)

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19.—Virginius Taxpayer stood at a window in the State office building looking out throught the wide-spreading branches of the trees of Capitol Square.

Up there, on the hill, he could see the classic columns of the historic Capitol building and in it, he knew, were the executive offices of the Governor of the State and the halls in which the General Assembly held its biennial sessions.

He also had a vague idea that at least two of its three floors housed other offices in which employes of the State, paid out of funds to which he contributed, worked daily at tasks he did not entirely understand.

State Buildings.

Nearer at hand, on the eastern edge of the square, he saw the State library building. Its third floor housed books for use of citizens of the State generally and on its first and second floors were historical records, the specialized law library and chambers of the supreme court of appeals. He was familiar with these and with the fascinating basement museum with its stuffed birds and animals and samples of the State's native products.

But he also knew that the building contained offices labelled "attorney general," "comptroller," "treasurer" and others whose function he did not entirely understand. He knew they all cost the State, and its taxpayers, money to maintain.

Men at Work.

Mr. Taxpayer knew the building in which he stood had been erected a comparatively short time ago, but that already it was filled to more than overflowing with State offices. A few of these did things he understood, but others remained a mystery.

Looking up and down rows of windows at the far end of the L-shaped structure with its towering height of 12 stories, he could see men bent over drafting boards, women manipulating test tubes or examing small glass plates, men and women scanning large sheets of what probably were statistical tables, and countless stenographers typing innumerable letters or reports. All of them, he was aware, contributed to the expenditure side of the State's financial statements. But what did they do for him?

Looking across the square and beyond the Capitol, Mr. Taxpayer could see the insurance company building, accommodating offices of the State auditor, who no longer could find room for his staff within the square. Still farther away to the westward the tower of a bank building marked the place where the newly organized alcoholic beverage control board was quartered. By going over to the south side of the office building, he could look out on the separate structure occupied by the division of motor vehicles.

In his hand Mr. Taxpayer held the blue and yellow slips that told the amount of his tax bill for last year. Whether or not he knew the functions of the State departments, it was obvious he was expected to pay for them.

Record of State.

Mr. Taxpayer was proud of his State's record during the depression years; of the way its credit was maintained without resort to the special taxes imposed in some other States. He had read the statement of E. R. Combs, State comptroller, that "good government is an evolutionary process and must of necessity involve something of the experimental," and that there is a "growing tendency on the part of the State authority to assume a larger responsibility in the aggregate costs of financing State and local government."

He had been told, too, that it was a fundamental law of economics that the costs of all Governments tend to increase as citizens demand that more functions be performed and that those functions be carried on more completely and efficiently.

He had heard talk also of the possibility of new taxes being needed to raise funds for relief purposes and discussions of the possible resort to a sales tax, which State Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrisett continued to call a "tax of last resort."

What's the Price?

Just how much was it costing to run the State? Where did this money go? Exactly what were the functions of all these offices centered in and around Capitol Square, and why were all these workers necessary to give him the kind of Government he wanted?

With these questions in mind, Virginius taxpayers started on a tour of inspection which was to carry him into all of the State offices, asking of each department head: What do you do here? Who does it and how is it done? Why is it necessary?

He started, naturally, with the man who seemed to be most directly responsible for making citizens contribute their share to the support of the State Government—Tax Commisioner Morrisett.

(In the second article of this series, to be published in The Post on Thursday, the State tax commissioner tells what becomes of the money the State collects.)

'Rightful' Placing on Maps Demanded for Culpeper, Va.

Rally Also Debates Town Owned Parking Lot for Shoppers.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.). Under auspices of the Culpeper Chamber of Commerce, a rally of Culpeper citizens was held today in the Municipal Auditorium to hear discussion on the establishment of a municipal parking lot, the two now furnished by local merchants being inadequate for automobiles of out-of-town shoppers, and to insist that Culpeper have her "rightful" place on tourist guide maps of this section of the State.

A protest was made by the secretary, C. N. Goldsborough, that Culpeper was being shunted from the beaten track of tourists to Skyline Drive by the efforts of other municipalities advertising their routes and causing maps to be made not showing the proper location of Culpeper.

Concerning more parking space, a committee was appointed to obtain one of several locations and to report at the regular meeting of the chamber. The plan used in Frederick, Md., for a free municipal parking lot, will be followed by Culpeper if possible. This park in question presented many advantages to the motorcade from Culpeper, which recently visited towns in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Assault Charge Is Considered By Grand Jury

Prisoner Is Accused by Playground Worker at Frederick.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 19 (AP).—The Frederick County grand jury, reconvening here today, began consideration of charges of attempted assault by a colored man on Miss Geraldine Kreh, 21-year-old playground worker.

Miss Kreh and Police Chief Allen Bartgis appeared as witnesses. William Carter, colored, who is said by police to have confessed to the attempted attack, is being held in the Baltimore City Jail for safekeeping.

The playground worker suffered a broken jaw when struck by the man.

Other cases scheduled to be heard by the jury includes:

Charges against four youths in connection with the burning of stables on the fair grounds last July 9. Indictments were returned by the grand jury last session but were quashed because of a technical flaw in wording. The four youths are Eldridge Fox, Clyde Moxley, James Harding and Joseph Blair, jr.

The case of Charles Ray, Frederick garage employe, charged with setting fire to the city bathhouse October 30.

The case of Joseph Norbett and Anthony Gildark, of Baltimore, charged with the robbery of a Thurmont dance hall November 2.

.22 Pistol Kills Wildcat Perched On Chicken Roost

Deer Park, Md., Nov. 19 (AP).—Charles Duckworth went out to his chicken coops to lock them up for the night and found a wildcat standing on one of the roosts feeding on a prize fowl.

Duckworth closed and locked the henhouse door, obtained a .22 pistol from his home nearby, returned and shot the wildcat between the eyes.

Va. Assembly Likely to Get New Speaker

J. S. Brown Seen as Gubernatorial Candidate.

Gov. Peery Yet to Name Clerk to Succeed Col. Williams.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—With the next session of the assembly facing the prospect of having both a new speaker and a new clerk, interest in Gov. Peery's choice of a successor to the late Col. John W. Williams heightened today.

It was believed probable, however, that Gov. Peery may take a month or more to decide upon the appointment.

J. Sinclair Brown, the present speaker of the house, has served three terms and while he may be drafted for a fourth, this is now considered unlikely if for no other reason than that Mr. Brown is being discussed as a possible candidate for governor to succeed Gov. Peery. Mr. Brown's predecessor, Thomas W. Ozlin, served two terms; Mr. Ozlin's predecessor, Richard L. Brewer, served three, and Harry Houston, who preceded Mr. Brewer, served two.

Candidates Named.

Meanwhile, the campaign for the clerkship was rapidly crystalizing, and before it is much older, practically every political leader in the Commonwealth may be drawn into it.

M. A. Hutchinson, former secretary of the Commonwealth, and George A. Bowles, former member of the House, who now is superintendent of insurance for the corporation commission, already are being pushed to the front by many friends.

So are a number of assemblymen, including Wilbur C. Hall, of Loudoun, and Ashton Dovell, of Williamsburg. It is not believed, however, that either of these men will be available, although some leaders want to give either or both of them "refusal" of the honor.

Mr. Hall is considered in line for the attorney generalship in case a contest arises as to the constitutional qualification of the incumbent, A. P. Staples.

Mr. Dovell is considered a potential candidate for Congress from the Third (Richmond) District. He also is viewed as a possible candidate for Governor in 1937. Both Mr. Hall and Mr. Dovell will be considered also as among the most likely prospects for the speakership if Mr. Brown declines to be a candidate for this office again.

Mr. Dovell is chairman of the appropriations committee of the House and is Democratic floor leader. Mr. Hall is chairman of the Democratic caucus and is chairman of the finance committee.

U. S. Prepares Coup to Save Arms Parley

Will Present Control Plan to Spike Soviet Move to Wreck Session.

Geneva, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—The United States sought tonight to spike Soviet Russia's efforts to break up the General Arms Conference when the steering committee convenes tomorrow.

Hugh Wilson, who plans to launch the American campaign for an international arms control treaty during the session, stole a march on Maxim Litvinoff, Russian delegate, who is determined to wind up the steering committee's business without further futile meetings in a vain effort to reach an arms accord.

Will Be First Speaker.

Wilson arranged that he should speak immediately after Arthur Henderson, chairman, opens the meeting, and thus hopes to create an atmosphere in which the committee will disregard Litvinoff's proposal to close the disarmament sessions and open a perpetual peace conference.

Wilson's plan is based on the draft arms control convention adopted by the conference's arms traffic committee last June, providing that governments assume full responsibility for the manufacture, import and export of arms in their territories.

Russia Holds Up Plans.

Meanwhile, Litvinoff refused to divulge Russia's plans. It was believed the Soviets feel Wilson plans merely to offer a device to keep the conference alive until Germany returns to Geneva—and the general impression was that Litvinoff therefore would do his utmost to close the arms conference.

Wilson, in a series of conferences with leading statesmen from other powers, was understood to have rallied wide support to his plan.

U. S. Wants to License Arms Manufacturers

(Associated Press.)

An American dream of ending uncontrolled manufacture and sale of arms and munitions will face today the cold scrutiny of European and Asiatic statesmen.

The American proposal for an international agreement to license those who manufacture and traffic in implements and munitions of war will be presented to the steering committee of the Disarmament Conference, meeting in Geneva, by Hugh Wilson, American Minister to Switzerland.

Secretary Hull talked by telephone with Wilson yesterday, giving him final instructions to make every legitimate effort to secure adherence of other world powers and favorable action by the steering committee.

Provides for Strict Control.

The American proposal, based on President Roosevelt's idea for as stringent control of arms as possible, provides for:

1. Licensing by each government of all manufacturers of implements or munitions of war for five-year periods.
2. Refusal to let arms manufacturers build up or carry reserve stocks of munitions, and requiring that they have a bona fire order before any license will be granted.
3. Licensing by each government of all importers and exporters of war supplies.
4. Transmittal of all data concerning any manufacturing or sales of arms or munitions to a central committee in Geneva, which will make the information available to the public at any time, and publish annual reports.
5. Setting up of a permanent commission in Geneva which would be authorized to conduct comprehensive investigations of any transactions in the sales of arms or munitions.

Japan Delivers Ultimatum on Naval Equality

Matsudaira Insists Upon Recognition of Parity, Rejects Proposals.

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—Ambassador Tsuneo Matsudaira, of Japan, tonight told Britain's foreign secretary that unless the British and Americans grant Japan full equality in a naval limitation treaty Japan will assume that status without a treaty.

Slowly and carefully Matsudaira gave to Sir John Simon the Japanese reply to the recent British compromise naval suggestions, rejecting them in toto because they recognized only equality in principle.

The Japanese reply puts the situation up to the other two powers again and renews the deadlock which has crippled the conversations since Japan first put forth her demands.

Rejects Compromise.

In rejecting the suggested compromise Matsudaira urged the British to consider new ways of meeting the Japanese request for full equality.

The British interpreted this as meaning there was still a possibility that the Japanese might compromise.

It was indicated in British quarters that the Japanese have made some modifications of their original proposals for a new treaty, but Japanese circles said they were willing to compromise only on technical questions, not principles.

Matsudaira told Sir John there can be no compromise on national prestige for Japan. He said the other powers must give Japan actual tonnage equality, although Japan was willing to make a declaration she would not build to that equality for a certain number of years.

Sir John planned to consult with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and the cabinet, informing the Americans of his moves, before the British and Japanese meet again.

The British proposals which the Japanese rejected provided for continuance of the existing ratio system and adherence to a category limitation.

Ask "Global" Limitation.

The Japanese want a global tonnage limitation which calls for a maximum upper level or limit for the naval equipment of each nation. This would give each power the right to build whatever type, number and size of ships it desired within the maximum total agreed upon.

The Japanese at various meetings have made it understood that the Washington Treaty will be denounced before the end of this year, effective in December, 1936.

The London Treaty ends this year. It is complimentary to the Washington Treaty which would continue indefinitely unless denounced.

Decision Awaited On 'Scenic' Route

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—At the State Highway Department offices today it was said Washington officials are expected to give an early decision on whether or not the proposed Blue Ridge Scenic Highway, an extension of the Skyline Drive, will run through the mountain-crest estate of Frederick W. Scott, Richmond financier.

Mr. Scott has opposed routing the road through the center of his "Royal Orchards" estate, suggesting that it dip down on the western side of the ridge below his property and connect with the Charlottesville-Staunton highway there.

The State officials said the departments of interior and agriculture, which are to make the final decision, had agreed to give the route further consideration after Mr. Scott and other property owners had lodged vigorous protests over the proposal to locate a 1,000 foot right of way through choice Scenic locations on their property.

Passing of Lame Ducks Creates Problem for Directory Makers

When lame ducks went out headaches came in for the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress.

Ansel Wold clerk, tells why.

Under the old system, abolished by Senator Norris' constitutional amendment, the committee would now be preparing the usual lame duck Congressional Directory. Newly-elected House and Senate members would not have been listed in it since they would not be seated until December, 1935.

But now—the headache powders, Cholmondeley!

At 12 o'clock noon on January 3, the Gufferys and Lucases and other neophytes will be sworn in. Until that hour those members who were defeated for reelection will hold office. Question—Shall the new directory, which is to appear on the afternoon of January 3, list Congress' make-up as of 11:59 a. m. or 12:01 p. m. on that date?

Mr. Wold says he and Representative J. Walter Lambeth, of North Carolina, vice chairman of the printing committee, had "a dickens of a time" deciding. After fierce deliberation it was agreed that the 12:01 p. m. plan was the more logical.

They realize, of course, that their decision may not go so well with the Senators and Representatives (up to noon January 3) whose names are left out.

But, after all, they're going out.

Lusk Addresses Taxpayer Body

U. S. Can't Build Anything So Cheaply as Private Interests, He Says.

In a talk on Washington's housing needs, Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Washington Taxpayers Protective Association, told the Monday Evening Club last night that the Government "never has and never will build houses or bridges or anything else as cheaply as private interests."

That is, he explained, the Government can't compete with private interests in this line unless it has the advantage of "tax exemption, lower interest rates, Pollyanna or smiling-through bookkeeping, or some form of subsidy." And if there is some such an advantage, he said, the cost will be levied on the taxpayer.

Lusk suggested to the local housing authority that before it embarks on any project it issue a statement that will be as comprehensive as though the Government were seeking a building loan to finance the project. Such a statement, he said, should set forth the total cost of construction and operation, not forgetting to include taxes, depreciation, interest, amortization, obsolescence, repairs, maintenance, vacancies and bad debts. Then, Lusk added, if there is a difference between the estimated rent and the actual cost of operation, the taxpayers should be advised that they will have to make up the difference.

Builders to Meet On Housing Plans

Business Men Will Discuss Federal Program.

Ideas for furthering the Federal housing program in Washington will be discussed by builders, contractors, building supply dealers, architects and other local business men at a meeting at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the board room of the Hamilton National Bank.

Arthur B. Heaton will preside and outline the possibilities for additional home repair and construction under the FHA sponsorship. The Better Homes Exposition scheduled to be held for two weeks beginning November 26 at the bus terminal on Pennsylvania avenue, between Sixth and Seventh street, will also be discussed.

Thomas P. Littlepage, chairman of the local housing campaign, said complete information on modernization loans will be made available at a special booth in the exposition. A committee of eight younger bankers has been named to operate the booth.

Unrest Shown By 'EPIC' Vote, Creel Asserts

Fears Californians Will Stampede Unless Party Acts at Once.

San Francisco, Nov. 19 (AP).—Terming Upton Sinclair's "EPIC" vote "plainly symptomatic of bitter dissatisfaction with existing conditions," George Creel, Roosevelt New Dealer, today said that unless forceful leadership is developed at once "California's unhappy and bewildered thousands will mill again and may stampede."

Creel, in a letter to Francis Carr, Democratic leader of Redding, Calif., appealed to the Democratic Party in California to "take the lead in formulating a progressive program, and thus provide a rallying point for liberal opinions."

Sinclair Polled 850,000.

Sinclair, former Socialist and author of the "End Poverty in California" campaign, defeated Creel in the primary election and then lost to Frank F. Merriam, Republican, in the race for Governor. Sinclair polled about 850,000 votes in the election.

"The EPIC vote was plainly symptomatic of bitter dissatisfaction with existing conditions, and must be heeded," Creel told Carr in terming the election "a Sinclair defeat and not a Merriam victory."

Proposals "Concrete."

"EPIC'S proposals whatever else may be thought of them, were concrete," Creel's letter continued. "Unless forceful leadership is developed at once, equally positive but sanely constructive, California's unhappy and bewildered thousands will mill again and may stampede.

"Support should be pledged to the President's forthcoming plan for old age insurance, the unemployment insurance and old age pensions," Creel wrote.

Paraguayans Plan to Invade Bolivian Chaco

Victorious Leaders Hope to End Long War With One Bold Stroke.

Asuncion, Paraguay, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—A bold plan for "an invasion into Bolivian territory" was formulated by the Paraguayan high command tonight, elated by victory in the Gran Chaco border war.

Heavy fighting was believed imminent again in this tropical waste, where Paraguayan forces swept to tremendous victories along a wide front in the last offensive, breaking the Bolivian line's backbone and threatening to end the long warfare.

Gen. Jose Estigarribia announced a new offensive, which would carry the Paraguayans into what is considered Bolivian territory on the badly marked frontier, in a desperate campaign to end the war with complete victory for Paraguay.

His force in the field pushed on swiftly in pursuit of the retreating Bolivians, routed by the fall of Fort Ballivian, the "Gibraltar" of their Chaco front lines. They fled northward along the Pilcomayo River.

Plans for a rapid Paraguayan advance of the main forces were declared "an invasion" of Bolivian territory in Asuncion because Fort Ballivian is considered the last Bolivian outpost in the disputed Chaco area, the land to the north being Bolivia.

The Paraguayan command was confident if the invasion is successful they will be able to dictate peace terms.

U. S. to Remain Aloof From Chaco Mediation

State Department officials gave careful study yesterday to the request by a League of Nations committee to cooperate in efforts to end the Chaco war, but there was no intimation the Government had changed its position of remaining aloof from league-directed efforts to arbitrate the conflict.

Secretary Hull said the American position remained unchanged. This entails friendliness toward league efforts, while reserving the right for the Nation to cooperate in its own time and manner.

The league committee Sunday appealed especially to Brazil and the United States to collaborate in efforts to induce Bolivia and Paraguay to terminate the two-year-old conflict, after which conferences for final settlement of the dispute would begin in Buenos Aires.

Hull said yesterday the United States does not make it a practice to accept membership in official organizations of the league, because of its nonmembership, but again expressed willingness of the United States to cooperate at its discretion with any peace agency and in any peace movement.

Hull indicated the United States had not been sounded out by the league in advance of its committee report.

GameGivenAid In Shenandoah

Park Becomes Sanctuary as Hunting Is Tabooed.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—Carl H. Nolting, commissioner of game and inland fisheries, today announced that the entire Shenandoah National Park is a game sanctuary, and no hunting will be allowed anywhere within its boundaries.

The announcement was made after an agreement was made between Mr. Nolting and William E. Carson, conservation and development commissioner.

The agreement is binding until the Federal Government assumes complete control over the area. After that the Federal authorities will have jurisdiction, but it was pointed out by officials in the game department that all such Federal Government reservations are game sanctuaries.

The park covers areas in Warren, Rappahannock, Page, Madison, Greene, Rockingham, Albemarle and Augusta counties.

Harmony Seen New Congress Theme Song

Rep. Byrns Says Loyalty to President Will Prevail; Silent on Speaker.

By Robert C. Albright.

A short and for the most part harmonious session of Congress, with loyalty to President Roosevelt cementing many otherwise diverse interests, was forecast yesterday by House Democratic Leader Joseph W. Byrns.

Taking issues with predictions of a wild, erratic Congress, the tall, rangy Tennesseean, still confident in his claims to the speakership, appeared little perturbed by the legislative hurdles ahead. He said he will be able to "handle" the House situation if he is given the chance.

His statement coincided with the entry of a new "dark horse" candidate in the House leadership race. Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, of Virginia, chairman of the independent offices appropriations subcommittee, said he is greatly interested in a suggestion by colleagues that he run for leader.

First to Announce.

The Woodrum announcement is an innovation in the present scramble for responsible jobs in the new House set-up. A dozen or more candidates have announced for the Speakership, with the leadership also in mind, but the Virginian apparently has made the first avowed bid for the floor leadership.

In so doing he made a plea against geographic considerations in any House realignment that may take place.

"Positions of high responsibility and leadership should be given to men because of their ability to do the job, and not because of interparty alignment," he said.

"Whether a man is or is not from the South should not be the determining factor. He should be selected by his colleagues because of their confidence and belief in his willingness to carry the Flag."

Representative Byrns, the present House leader, would make no predictions on the next floor leadership, although Representatives Bankhead, of Alabama; McCormack, of Massachusetts, and Mead, of New York, also have their hats in the speakership ring.

Despite the Woodrun appeal, sectional considerations are expected to find voice in the Democratic caucus, tentatively scheduled for two or three days before Congress convenes on January 3. Northern and Western Democrats wield a powerful vote, and are expected to force more generous representation in the dozen chairmanships and 157 committee vacancies to be filled. Northern and Western bids are in for all major House offices.

Mandate "Recalled."

In forecasting a harmonious session, Representative Byrns said he is keeping in mind the "mandate" he believes was delivered to Congress on election day. Byrns, who incidentally was the first of his party to predict a net gain in House Democratic seats, said the election was an indorsement of Roosevelt leadership, and the House is not likely to stray far from White House policies.

In the role of prophet, Byrns went a bit farther. He said the reelection of Roosevelt in 1936 is assured "without a doubt." Just returned from Tennessee and a brief personal chat with the President en route from Knoxville to Nashville, Byrns again asserted that neither the President or his Administration is going to take any hand, directly or indirectly, in the Speakership fight.

The Democratic floor leader, who has authority under House rules to summon a Democratic caucus to reorganize the House, is determined not to do so before Christmas, or in any event until after he has talked the matter over with other leaders. If his own preferences are followed, he said, the caucus will be held just before the convening of Congress, so every elected member will have a chance to vote.

Besides the Speakership and leadership battles, there are other major House jobs that may be contested. Representative James V. McClintic, of Oklahoma, who was defeated for reelection, is reported angling for the sergeant at arms office now held by Kenneth Romney.

Views Expressed.

Once the routine, but important matter of House reorganization is out of the way, the House will be ready to legislate. Here are the views of Leader Byrns on legislative issues at stake:

Taxes—"I don't look for any big tax bills this session."

Relief—"Conditions undoubtedly are vastly improved. We should not need as much in the way of relief appropriations as we did last year. More people are at work and more money is in circulation. Specifically I can not say how much will be asked until the Administration's recommendations are in shape."

Discharge rule—"That will be up to the caucus." (A movement is underway to require 218 signatures to a petition, instead of 145, to discharge a committee.)

Bonus—"That will depend on the bill that is offered. I have heard at least three plans proposed, ranging all the way from payment only of those on the relief rolls, payment of persons not subject to income tax."

Railroads—"I look for some railroad legislation. If the Supreme Court finds the railway retirement bill unconstitutional, I think there will be a movement to write a new one."

Turmoil Is Reported In County's Records

Richmond, Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—A disorderly condition of records and irregularities in methods were reported today by State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs in his report to the Westmoreland County Board of Supervisors on an audit of that county's affairs.

The report said the county clerk, instead of filing canceled warrants, bills, vouchers and delinquent tax lists in orderly fashion had piled these documents on the floor where they had been walked on and were generally discarded along with any other papers to which no value was attached.

Any married man will tell you what interior decoration is. It's when a wife rearranges the furniture, moving the bookcase where the chair should be, and switching the divan over to the other side of the room in such a way that her husband always bumps his shins when he gets home late at night. All women, we are told, are secretly confident that, given the chance, they would be marvelous successes as interior decorators, and when they reach that stage of efficiency, where no piece of furniture is allowed to stay put for more than a week, they are supremely happy.

Further study of the interior decoration problem has revealed two schools of thought: One designed to make the home comfortable and livable, and the other, which revolves about cute little tables and modern book-ends, to make other women say "o-oh" and "a-ah." This latter method is unpopular with men because there is never a place to drop cigarette ashes, and the chairs are about as comfortable as a Potomac Park bench.

However, Katherine Smith, of The Washington Post, our expert on home decoration, successfully combines both these schools of thought, and when she plans a room, husbands like it because there's a smoking stand and a footstool handy, and wives like it because Mrs. Johnson, who lives next door, will see it and become jealous. Her articles on decoration, in The Post each Sunday, are the Final Word on what to do with those awful vases Aunt Minnie gave you, and how to hide the radiator pipes. Frankly, you can't get along without her advice, whether you're planning to invest $5,000 in new furniture, or 10 cents in a can of paint.

Even if you're determined to do that room over in the modern manner, she can help you. Our Katherine is, we believe, the only interior decorator living who can take those chromium-and-glass things and place them so that the room doesn't look like an angular hotel-bar. Her advice is so authoritative and easy to take that we ask her opinion whenever we plan to move a typewriter table or a wastebasket here in the office. Her shopping column, too, not only tells you where to buy nice things, but where to put them after you've had them delivered.

After all, decorating a room is something like mixing a cocktail: The individual pieces or ingredients might be all right alone, but after they're together, they can be awful. Before you move that bookcase again, find out what Miss Smith says. Your husband will think you're a wonder, and the ladies of the bridge club will be impressed. Miss Smith answers your problems on interior decoration . . . and you'll find her interesting, intelligent articles each Sunday in

Row Over Play Offs Perils Little World Series

Georgetown, in Hiding, Prepares for Maryland

Showdown Expected Today

Crowds Hurt by Plan, Charge of American Association.

Landslide Business Due at Minors' Sessions; Open Tomorrow.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 19 (AP).—A dispute that may cause abandonment of the little World Series between the championship clubs of the International League and American Association arose today as the Nation's baseball leaders, large and small, jammed into Louisville for the annual minor league meetings.

The dispute revolved about the intricate play-off plans of the International League, which, American Association leaders charged, ruined the Class AA classic last fall. The International League pennant winner was decided by three postseason series in which the first and third place clubs would meet in one, the second and fourth place teams in another, and the winners in a third for the league championship. So much time was taken for those play-off series, American Association leaders said, that the little World Series suffered a serious financial reverse.

No Indication of Yielding.

American Association play-off plans called simply for the series between its leading Western and Eastern teams, regardless of their respective standings in the regular season race.

While American Association club owners insisted the International League cut down its postseason championship series, there was no indication the Easterners would yield.

"Our play-off plans seem to please the majority of the club owners in our league," said Warren Giles, of Rochester, chairman of the International League executive committee. "I don't see any chance for a change."

Didn't Realize Much.

"If a change isn't made somehow," said President Thomas J. Hickey of the American Association, "we can't see much use of holding the little World Series next fall. Last fall, it came so late that all interest in it seemed dead. The players didn't realize much from the gate receipts."

A showdown in the controversy is expected tomorrow when committees of the two leagues meet.

Although the hotel lobbies began filling up today with major and minor league magnates and managers, who were reported ready for a landslide business in the player mart, the only important meeting was that of the American Association, which elected the 73-year-old Hickey to his twenty-second term as its president. The election was secret, but club owners said his re-election was unanimous. He was reelected for one year as president, secretary and treasurer.

Exceeded 1933 Gate.

In his report to the club owners, President Hickey said attendance last season exceeded that of 1933 by 15 per cent, with Columbus, league and little world champion, the greatest magnet of them all.

By unanimous vote it also was decided to continue the association All-Star game next year. No discussion was held on the schedule, but President Hickey said it undoubtedly would run 154 games again, opening probably on April 16.

The new St. Paul corporation, which purchased the St. Paul club, was represented at today's A. A. meeting, and accepted to league membership.

Meanwhile, registrations for the annual minor league meeting, opening Wednesday, poured in. President W. G. Bramham estimated that 900 would attend the meetings.

Chicago Bears Lead Pro Gridders on Points

New York, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Chicago's Bears are within 4 points of the National Professional Football League scoring record set last season by the New York Giants. The record is 240 points. The Bears also lead in yards gained with 3,270. The Detroit Lions have displayed the best defensive in holding opponents to a total of 1,393 yards and 27 points in ten games.

Lewis Wins in Paris.

Paris, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Ed (Strangler) Lewis applied five quick headlocks after 1 hour and 5 minutes of wrestling and threw the French heavyweight, Henri Deglane, here tonight.

Newman, Injured, Is Out for Season

Giants' Star Suffers Two Fractured Vertebrae.

New York, 19 (AP).—Harry Newman, star quarter back of the New York Giants of the National Professional League, went to St. Elizabeth's Hospital today with two fractured vertebrae, suffered in yesterday's bruising game with the Chicago Bears. He is lost to the Giants for the remainder of the season.

Newman was hurt when he was tackled by two Chicago players following a 20-yard run in the third period. He retired from the game for the remainder of the quarter, but returned to action in the fourth.

Bevans Loses To Silas in 2d Round

Hunt Club Semifinal Ends Early; Irving Winner on Split Decision.

Bob Wilson held a slight lead over Phil Furr at the end of the sixth round of the feature bout. It was a slugging affair, but no knockdowns had been recorded.

Sid Silas won a technical knockout from Pete Bevans, Washington welterweight, in a semifinal scheduled for six rounds. The New York gladiator floored Bevans for a 9 count early in the first round, with a smashing right to the jaw. Bevans rose to run into a flurry that sent him down for no count at the bell. He was down for two counts of 9 in the second round before referee Charley Reynolds called a halt.

Bill Bullock, of Washington, took a unanimous decision from young Raspio, of Baltimore, in a slow lightweight six-round preliminary.

Sammy Sweet, Cincinnati bantamweight, took unanimous decision from Al Dintaman, of Washington, in a fast four-round bout.

Joe Ferrone, promising New York welterweight prospect, took a unanimous decision from Sailor Leonard, of Washington, in another four-rounder.

Henry Irving took a split decision from Jake Hudson, of Baltimore, in an opening four-rounder. Referee Howard Livingston voted for the Baltimore light-heavy, Judge Henri Di Sibour, Judge Denny Hughes, and the crowd declared Hudson the winner.

Cardozo Bows To Armstrong

Eliminated From City Title Series; Score Is 44-0.

ARMSTRONG HIGH SCHOOL gridders yesterday eliminated Cardozo Business High from the colored interhigh city championship competition, swamping their opponents, crippled from the recent contest, 44 to 0. The game was played at Griffith Stadium. Duvall, big Armstrong center, caught one of Tracy's punts and raced 60 yards through the Cordozo team for the first touchdown. Smith plunged through the line for the extra point. Freeman repeated this performance a few minutes later, negotiating 80 yards for a touchdown.

Armstrong will meet Dunbar next Monday at the stadium to decide the championship, Dunbar having defeated Cordozo last Thursday, 25 to 0.

Minnesota and Pitt Are Ranked One-Two

By Alan Gould.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (AP).—Rounding up the gridiron grist after the most explosive week-end of the 1934 intercollegiate season, here's our idea of how the "first ten" ranking of the major league "clubs" should be shaken up:

1. Minnesota; 2. Pittsburgh; 3. Alabama; 4. Ohio State; 5. Stanford; 6. Rice; 7. Colgate; 8 Louisiana State; 9. Army; 10. Temple.

This leaves plenty of room for argument. Minnesota and Alabama have the only "perfect" records, but that isn't necessarily the final yardstick for measuring greatness. All things considered, Yale's 11 "iron men" played one of the greatest games of the whole season, against Princeton, but that doesn't entitle the Elis to a place in the "first ten." It's possible for a great team to take one "on the chin" and still come back to rank among the best, like Pittsburgh, or Ohio State.

Critics who have had a good chance to compare all three do not hesitate to rate Pitt and Ohio State right next to the Minnesota maulers for all-round class, speed, deception and power. It's difficult to compare Alabama, Stanford and Rice with these three, chiefly because they play mostly in different sectional company. It's noteworthy, however, that Rice and Stanford scored the only intersectional victories over Big Ten teams by beating Purdue and Northwestern, respectively.

Alabama's Crimson Tide remains the favorite for the Rose Bowl nomination against Stanford, barring an upset for the Pacific Coast leaders in this Saturday's "big game" against California, but don't count Pittsburgh out of the Pasadena picture until the final returns are posted. It may not necessarily be a factor in the situation, but it is interesting to note that Claude (Tiny) Thornhill, Stanford's head coach, and Dr. John B. (Jock) Sutherland, head man among the Pitt Panthers, played side by side in the line on one of Pittsburgh's greatest teams in 1916.

Coached by Glenn (Pop) Warner, the 1916 Pitt team was unbeaten. Thornhill played left tackle and Sutherland left guard, with an outfit that included Bob Peck, All-America center, as well as Herron, Hastings, DeHart, McLaren and Carlson.

If Pitt doesn't make another trip to the Rose Bowl—and the odds now are against it—the Panthers may listen to overtures to participate in the inaugural "sugar bowl" intersectional game at New Orleans, also on January 1. Pop Warner's Temple eleven, one of the few remaining unbeaten aggregations, also looms as a candidate to represent the North. Louisiana State looks like the logical choice to carry the Southed banner, although the sponsors likely also will consider Rice Institute, the powerhouse of the Southwest. Rice and L. S. U. played a tie game.

Outstanding passing combinations in this year's aerial circus include Stanford's Grayson and Moscrip, Rice's Wallace and McCauley, Alabama's Howell and Hutson, Colgate's Kern and Bogdanski (with variations), and Yale's Roscoe and Kelley. The Alabama pair completed six passes for gains of 103 yards against Georgia Tech Saturday . . . Notre Dame's chief scout, Tom Conley, journey all the way from South Bend to West Point Saturday, hoping for a last-minute size-up of Buckler, Stancook and Company in action, but all he saw were the Cadet reserves . . . This week's renewal of the rivalry between the Irish and the Soldiers, at the Yankee Stadium, may not be a sellout, but will draw close to 70,000 . . . Yale's thrilling upset of Princeton marked the tenth time in around 60 years that the Elis toppled the Tigers from the unbeaten ranks.

Ohio Coach Goes Hunting; Team Rests

Coach Francis A. Schmidt went hunting rabbits and pheasants during the morning. When he returned, shortly after noon, he hung out the "No practice today" sign for the first time since September 15.

'Brick' Chisholm Shoots 67 On Course at Charlottesville

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—Playing yesterday afternoon on the links of the Farmington Country Club, Earl R. (Brick) Chisholm, formerly assistant pro at the Farmington Club, shot a sensational 67.

His card:

Out ..... 4 4 4 3 5 2 4 5 4—35
In ..... 3 4 3 3 4 3 5 3 4—32

The score was within one stroke of Walter Hagen's 66, made on the same course two years ago. Par is 71.

In his foursome, Chisholm had as his partner, W. F. (Fritz) Souder, jr., former club champion. Their opponents were Dick von Tacky, of Allentown, Pa., a student at the University of Virginia, who recently won the college golf championship, and Thomas H. Somerville, of Montpelier, also a former Farmington club champion.

Throughout the match young Chisholm gave a superb exhibition of putting. The best ball of the foursome was 62. Somerville turned in a 73, while Souder and Von Tacky each had a 77.

Max Baer's Arm Infected by Serum

Mexico City, Nov. 19 (U.P.).—Max Baer's scheduled departure for Chicago has been delayed due to an infection in his left arm, which began swelling today. Doctors ordered the heavyweight boxing champion to bed. He was innoculated in the army last week.

"I had planned to leave for Chicago today," Baer said, "but the arm began swelling and paining me plenty today."

He was guest of honor at a bull fight yesterday and has been the chief attraction at numerous other events.

Cross-Country Title Is Won By Ottey

Michigan State Ace Leads by 250 Yards at End; Venzke Is 26th.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (AP).—Blonde Tom Ottey, of Michigan State, who runs over the college crop of 'cross-country harriers like Minnesota rolls up and down football fields, went through the formality today of winning his second successive national intercollegiate championship over 6 miles of rolling country in Van Courtlandt Park.

Loping along in front of the pack from the first mile on, Ottey, former national 10,000-meter champion and a competitor in the 1932 Olympic games, led by 200 yards halfway around the course and continued on to retain his individual title in 31 minutes 54.6 seconds. Behind him at the finish, 250 yards back, was Edwin C. Vesey, of Colby, New England intercollegiate champion, with J. Nelson Gardner, of Michigan State, third, another 100 yards back.

Retains Team Title.

Ottey and Gardner pulled Michigan State into the team championship for the second straight year with a total of 74 points and men in first, third, twenty-second, and thirty-first places, while a surprisingly strong Maine team took second with 93 points.

The freshman 3-mile jaunt was won by John Sharpe, of Columbia, in 15 minutes 38.4 seconds. The Lions, for the first time in the 25-year history of the races, also captured the freshman team title with a total of 64 points to 69 for Princeton. Walter Williamson, of Lafayette, finished second in the freshman race, 50 yards behind Sharpe and half that distance ahead of Peter Olexy, of Penn State.

New Course Mark.

It wasn't much of a day for 'cross-country running with the air warm and the atmosphere humid, but Ottey's time set a new mark for the course freshly built by C. W. A. workers.

Gene Venzke, of Pennsylvania, turned in one of the poorest performances of his career. The crack miler started off a dead last, maintained his position valiantly through the first 3 miles, and, moving up leisurely in the late stages, wound up twenty-sixth.

Virginia Squad Takes Day Off

Cavaliers' List of Cripples Reaches Peak; Team Primes for Heels.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—Virginia's entire varsity squad was excused from practice this afternoon by Coach Gus Tebell. When the squad reports tomorrow to start intensive preparations for playing North Carolina on Thanksgiving it is likely that many of the regulars will be missing.

The Cavalier list of cripples is now at its peak, and, though many of the injured will be in shape to play the Tar Heels, several of the first stringers are sure to be sitting on the sidelines for the final game in Scott Stadium.

Only 3 Regulars Ready.

Only Horace Hallett, veteran center, and the three tackles who have been taking turns as regulars, Edward Andrews, Sanford Haskell and Leonard Trell, would be able to get into a scrimmage if they were called upon to do so tomorrow.

Johnny Leys, regular left end, and Alfred Seccombe, regular right guard, did not even make the trip to Blacksburg to face V. P. I. last Saturday. Randy Garnett, regular quarter back, suffering a Charley horse, sat on the bench until he had to go in when Capt. Tommy Johnson was hurt in the second half.

Johnson got another lick on the shoulder that was hurt at Dartmouth. Despite the pain he carried on until Coach Tebell had him removed from action. He may miss several days of drill but is being counted on to play against Carolina.

Berger Among Injured.

Spencer Berger, veteran full back, and Vincent Cardwell, half back, may be kept out of the Tar Heel game with injuries they sustained on Miles Field. Berger has a shoulder injury similar to that of Johnson, while Cardwell has exactly the same leg injury that has kept both Leys and Seccomb from playing.

Cullen Wilkin, regular right end, went to the hospital for treatment this morning.

Billy Zimmer, regular left guard, rounds out the list of the injured regulars. He had to be taken out early in the Tech contest, but should be ready to go against North Carolina.

Bridgewater Claims 'Title;' 29 Games Without a Victory

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—This probably will come as a cruel jolt to the sons of Knox and Hobart, to which life has become just one cruel jolt after another, but loyal "supporters" of Bridgewater College believe this Virginia college has the most valid claim to football's consolation prize.

Let Hobart brag about its record of 27 defeats—a record Knox threatens to equal when it meets Monmouth on Thanksgiving Day—but, shucks, say Bridgewater's faithful, the Eagles not only "enjoyed" a losing streak of 27 games but went 29 games without winning a victory. An unexpected 6-6 tie with Randolph-Macon in 1928 spoiled the record.

The Eagles lost the next game and for 27 consecutive times came out of the small end of the horn. They snapped out of the losing streak last year with victory over American University and the following Saturday defeated Gallaudet.

The Eagles, after losing only five more games, came back this year to defeat Gallaudet again, 8 to 0. A couple of days ago, Bridgewater, closing its season against Juniata, was beaten, 63 to 0. Sixty-three points aren't so many. William and Mary won, 95 to 0, in 1931.

If Knox and Hobart ask for more evidence, Bridgewater can say in rebuttal:

Bridgewater, 166, opposition, 1,860.

Camp Set Up, Trick Plays Mapped

Capt. Saverine Still Out, Hopes to Return to Duty Saturday.

Terps Hold Light Drill; Resume Hard Work This Afternoon.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

WITH all the deadly earnestness of two nations preparing for war, Georgetown and Maryland yesterday launched preparations for their first game since 1907, which will be played Saturday before a capacity throng at College Park.

Head Coach Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, herded his men together yesterday and transported them to an outlying camp for the final week of preparation. Hagerty refused to disclose where the team practiced, but merely said he would produce it in time for the game and not before.

Outlines New Plays.

At Maryland Coach Jack Faber sent the Terps through a limbering up drill after a lengthy blackboard talk during which he outlined new plays concocted especially for the Hoyas. All players are in good physical condition and will resume hard work this afternoon.

Capt. Joe Saverine, Georgetown's fiery leader, watched his mates run through signals from the sidelines. Saverine still is on crutches though he hopes to be sufficiently recovered from strained leg muscles to play.

Hagerty has figured out some trick maneuvers that will make Colgate look like a sandlot team by comparison. Even the referee's position on the field is considered in the execution of some.

Maryland feels, and rightly so, that the Blu and Gray will be fresher than the Terps after a two weeks' layoff, and also will be able to use plays worked out in that period. But Georgetown counters with the charge that the Old Liners should be at razor-edge after their battle with Indiana and that Maryland will have a decided advantage in manpower.

Maryland's brilliant array of backs and apparently unlimited supply of them may be the deciding factor in the battle. Georgetown can not hope to match its rival in reserve material, especially in the back field, although the Hoyas' first eleven will ask no quarter.

Weight Edge in Line.

In the front line the Hilltoppers will have a decided weight advantage, which will be offset by individual ability on the part of at least three Terps. Georgetown has no end to compare with Vic Willis or Lou Ennis. Joe Chappa, the Hoyas' outstanding flankman, can match them defensively, but Chappa is not the pass receiver that these two are.

Bill Andorka, at center, also looks to be a better tenter than ponderous Frank Williamson, unless the Georgetown boy shakes off his lethargic mood and plays the game he is capable of playing.

Byrd Stadium, scene of the game, has been rounded out into a complete bowl by carpenters and will accommodate a crowd of approximately 14,000 fans.

Day after day, I've fascinatedly returned to watch the Belnord Shirt soak and soak in a glass tank on the men's furnishings counter. There's something almost sinister the way the collar holds its shape without a single crease or wrinkle. I'm afraid my libido will cause me to snatch that shirt and mangle it with my own two hands if something don't happen soon . . . but I'm afraid it won't. The collar is a new construction, guaranteed not to wilt or wrinkle, no matter how long you wear it. So I'll either have to keep away or take bromides. But the packaging of gift jewelry, braces and belts at THE PALAIS ROYAL, is sheer Oriental lavishness. For instance, Messrs. Knothe, pack a sterling silver buckle, tie-clasp and collar bar in a handsome walnut and chrome ash-tray. Mr. Hickok whimsically suggests his belt and buckle sets (to say nothing of his regimental braces) are hot stuff by packing them in modernistic ash receptacles and smokers' boxes. Two gifts in one, messrs. and miladies.

Tabitha Wins at Bowie Track Before 8,000 Fans; Wheatley Entry Dismal Failure

Filly Scores By Neck in Feature

Corinne Dailey Second; Meade Registers With Two Long Shots.

By Walter Haight.

AND so they tore up their tickets on the Wheatley entry and asked one another, "What do you like in the next race?" When I refer to they, I mean three-fourths of the crowd of 8,000 who went down under the stands and loaded the mutuel machine with the coin of the realm on the chances of Dusky Princess and Slapdash. As the race was run they would have done as well if they had lighted cigarettes with the greenbacks.

Of course, there was a winner. It was Tabitha, a fairly well played 2-year-old filly at that, but not one that smacked of the class of Dusky Princess and Slapdash. However, she was good enough yesterday. By a neck she defeated Corinne Dailey which, in turn, had a length advantage over Bit O' Shade. Dusky Princess managed to wiggle into the $50 fourth portion of the purse, but she was out of range of the important betting money.

Runs Disgracefully.

It was just another of those "something-always - happens-to-the-favorite" races. Just what happened could not be ascertained, but the fact remains that the Wheatley entry ran disgracefully. The performance was nose and nose with that of the Labrot entry last week.

Bit O' Shade was first to show in front as the field left the starting gate for the mile and 70 yards test, named "The Caroline" for some reason or another. Tabitha, ridden by the diminutive Rosengarten, was close up, with Slapdash and Corinne Dailey following. Dusky Princess had one horse, Eadhild, beaten. There was virtually no change in the order until the far turn where Slapdash sailed through the field and appeared on the way to an easy win. She moved up to within a length of Tabitha, which had supplanted Bit O' Shade as the pacesetter.

Makes Up Some Ground.

From there in, however, Slapdash slid back and those with the entry turned to Dusky Princess as their hope. She was far back, made up some ground, but could not get in the fight for the chief money. Rosengarten pumped Tabitha along and Corinne Dailey moved up and almost nipped the winner. Bit o' Shade staggered into the third money.

Those who lost on the races yesterday picked a beautiful day for it. A warm sun was working overtime and men and women were seen carrying their heavy coats. Tom Thorp, the football referee and turf writer, worked in shirt sleeves.

There was a distinct Meade touch to the early races. After Goldfin surprised with a $16.70 mutuel in the opener, the E. R. Bradley rider brought a pair of longshots to the wire in easy fashion. The first was Occidental at $27.70, and Ariel Cross at $25.30.

Fairly Wild Winner.

The public, or those who make the favorites, had their first chance to celebrate in the fourth race, thanks to a brilliant ride by Jockey Silvio Coucci and an equally brilliant stretch run by Fairly Wild. The $5.20 mutuel was satisfying.

Sonny Workman, the Washington jockey, brought a well-played second choice home in the sixth race. It was Alladins Dream at a $6.70 mutuel. Workman's mount drew away in the closing drive and topped the favored Big Show.

Workman came right back with a losing favorite, Salisbury, which outclassed the field on paper, was a poor third in the finale. Campagna, a paddock tip, was the winner, with Tight Wad second.

Navy Gridders Granted Day Of Rest

Only Varsity Reserves and 'B' Team Hold Scrimmage.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 19 (Spl.—All Navy gridders who participated in the Pittsburgh debacle Saturday were given a complete rest from activities today. However, the usual Monday lecture was on tap, and the players also saw the movie of Saturday's hard struggle.

With the preliminary season over, from now on it will be a question of concentration on the game with the rival West Point Cadets to be staged on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, December 1.

Today's practice program consisted of a lively scrimmage session between a team picked from the varsity reserves, and squad "B" men with the former outfit emulating Army's style of play. To ma e this more effective, 11 of the players were equipped as Army regulars, even to the extent of being clad in jerseys of black, gold and gray, the Army colors, and patterned after the style worn by the gray legs.

Moreover they wore the names of Army players across their breast. So, it would seem, that George Whitmyer, and Soucek, who will take off Jack Buckler and Stancook, Army's star half and full back, respectively, stand to take some pretty hard knocks, especially when the regulars take the defensive against them beginning tomorrow.

Cambridge Rugby Victor.

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—Cambridge University defeated Newport, 18 to 13, in a Rugby Union match today.

GOLDFIN, outrun in the early stages, moved up resolutely when entering the home stretch, then finished strongly to wear the leaders down in the last sixteenth. FAIR VERBENA raced in the first flight from the beginning, then was weakly handled approaching the finish. MISS ALPHONSO closed fast from a slow beginning. ROYAL DUCHESS was hard ridden to gain command, but was not good enough when put to a drive. SUNDROPS finished gamely. OVERWOOD had early speed. SAXON QUEEN stopped.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OCCIDENTAL, $27.70, $9.00, $5.30; CANTERSINE, $15.70, $5.70; FLYING WATCH, $3.70.

OCCIDENTAL, unruly and delaying the start, broke quickly to hold a forward position in the early stages, assumed command midway of the turn, then held on stoutly in the final drive to outstay CANTERSINE. Latter was kept in the thick of contention, then held on strongly for the final test. FLYING WATCH worked his way up between horses, then came with a rush approaching the finish. TOYTIME was used up racing with PRINCE WICK and she weakened during the closing furlong. OVALETTE hung after making a bold effort nearing the home stretch. NED O went evenly after getting out of tight quarters. DOUGLAS F could not stay. PRINCE WICK tired badly. LADY HOCKBERGER had brief speed.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; allowances. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:16. Off at 2:25. Winner, G. H. Bostwick's br. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARIEL CROSS, $25.30, $9.80, $6.70; TWEEDLDEE, $6.30, $4.00; CLOUD SWEEPER, $5.30.

ARIEL CROSS assumed command soon after the start, was taken under slight restraint while setting the early pace, then finished with something in reserve at the end. TWEEDLEDEE forced a steady pace from the beginning, then held on with good courage when placed to punishment during the stretch drive. CLOUD SWEEPER held to a forward position, but could not threaten the first two. CANTERBOY went stoutly throughout. OFFICIAL was away well, but was unable to better his position. DOWDY DELL lost much ground. TANGERLOO bore out badly all during the last five-sixteenths. MINNA dropped back after going a half-mile. MARCHING HOME was never a factor.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:53. Off at 2:54½. Winner, W. Sachsenmaier's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FAIRLY WILD, $5.20, $4.10, $3.20; TAUNTON, $8.50, $5.90; STONE MARTIN, $4.20.

FAIRLY WILD, moved up steadily to enter contention at the far turn after being outrun for six furlongs, secured racing room on the inside when reaching the home stretch, then came through gamely to get up in the closing strides. TAUNTON, following closest to the early pacemaker, continued strongly when put to strong pressure in the last half-mile. STONE MARTIN sprinted into an easy lead, then was steaded until challenged. He held on resolutely at the end. XANDRIA was steered to the outside in the last five-sixteenths and lost considerable ground and she tired. SWATTER was never a factor. UNCLE DONALD was held safe. MY BOSS stopped.

TABITHA, rated close to BIT O' SHADE in the first six furlongs, took command when shaken up at the final curve, then held on strongly under a drive to withstand CORINNE DAILEY. Latter, timidly handled while saving ground, came strongly after reaching the home stretch. BIT O' SHADE had more speed while setting the early pace, then held on gamely. DUSKY PRINCESS, steadied off the early pace, came willingly when shaken up, but could not threaten the leaders. SLAPDASH went strongly for the first seven furlongs, then stopped after reaching the home stretch. EADHILD was held safe.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good, for all but Cloudet. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 3:51. Off at 3:54. ALADDINS DREAM, kept within striking distance of the leaders and saving ground wherever possible, wore BIG SHOW down entering the home stretch, then was kept under urging until the finish. BIG SHOW raced SKY HAVEN into submission, then was kept under strong pressure, but was not good enough. SKY HAVEN went forwardly and held on well for the closing test. CLOUDET went into the air when the start came, was rushed to his field and showed a good effort. BLIND BROOK was not persevered with at any stage and was permitted to race very wide. PRUMPER could not enter contention. DANCING BOY was done early.

CAMPAGNA, steadied along in the early stages while on the outside of the leaders, responded nicely when put to a drive, wore TIGHT WAD down inside the final furlong, then drew out slowly. TIGHT WAD, prominent from the beginning, shook off SALISBURY, but could not resist the winner. SALISBURY, in the deeper footing on the inside for six furlongs, was finally taken to the outside entering the home stretch and came again after dropping back. ADVOCATE JUNIOR weakened after reaching the home stretch. BLACK PATRICIA went evenly. The others were outrun.

Turner Starts New Mat System

Three-Fall Rule Will Be Inaugurated Here Tomorrow Night.

JOE TURNER, the Old Maestro of Matdom, burst forth yesterday with an explanation of the three-fall system of wrestling which will be inaugurated at the Auditorium tomorrow night in the Vic Christy—Rudy Dusek exhibition.

"In the three-fall," explained Joe, twitching a cauliflowered ear reminiscently, "As everybuddy knows, the guy that flops the other guy twice is the winner. There's a lotta things about the three-fall business that everybuddy don't know, however, an' I'll explain 'em."

"In the first place, a lotta people thing in a three-fall bout, each fall is only for one second. That ain't so. Each fall must be for three seconds, just like in a one-fall bout. In a three-fall bout, the rasslers get a count of 20 when they're outta the ring, instead of 10."

"If a fall is a quick one, the rasslers only get 5 minutes rest until they go back to work, but if a fall takes a long time, they're allowed 10 minutes to rucu . . . to recookoo . . . to recep . . . they're allowed 10 minutes rest. The time limit is the same as in one-fall bouts—two hours. Don't forget to mention that ladies accompanied by paid escorts will be admitted free to this show."

In addition to the Christy-Dusek main event, an interesting preliminary card has been arranged. Handsome Hans Kampfer is scheduled to make war on Little Beaver in a 45-minute semifinal.

In 30-minute time limit affairs, Thor Johansen, a 310-pound newcomer to these shores will tackle Sun Jennings, and Floyd Marshall will pit his grunts and groans against Charley Allen.

Ladies accompanied by a paid escort will be admitted free.

Cards' Owner Delays Trip To Florida

Has No Connection With Club Deal, However, Breadon Says.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 19 (AP).—Sam Breadon, president of the St. Louis Cardinals, today said he may postpone his planned trip to Florida, but added that a postponement would not be connected with the much-discussed negotiations for sale of the baseball club.

"I may not be able to get away before Friday or Saturday," Breadon said. He had planned to leave St. Louis today.

"The delay, however, is not due to anything that has happened in connection with the sale of the club, but to things that are coming up in the automobile business." Breadon is head of an automobile sales company.

Lew Wentz, the Oklahoma oil man, who is making an effort to buy the Cardinals, returned to his home at Ponca City, Okla., Saturday. He indicated he would be back in St. Louis by Thursday.

Officially, the deal for transfer of Breadon's controlling interest is "off," but circumstances point to a resumption of negotiations soon.

Hickory Lad Wins EpsomDownsPurse

Houston, Tex., Nov. 19 (AP).—A great burst of speed at the finish gave P. L. Kelley's Hickory Lad, winner of the Louisiana Derby last spring, a victory today in the Alamo claiming purse race, the feature of the second day of the fall meet at Epsom Downs.

Hickory Lad, with Harbort Up, was behind through the mile, but opened up to pass two rivals in the final sixteenth. He nosed out Bichloride by three-fourths of a length in a drive finish. Impeach was third. The winner paid $5.60, $3.60 and $2.80.

Vinson and McCarthy May Meet for Mythical Metropolitan Golf Championship

Col. Halsey Suggests Match

Congressional Course Is Offered for Play; Other News.

GENE VINSON, District golf champion, and Martin F. McCarthy, District "Champion of Champions," may meet in a special 36-hole match at Congressional Country Club for the mythical Metropolitan championship.

Col. Edwin Halsey, secretary of the Senate, an ardent golfer, suggested the match, and Congressional's Roland Mackenzie approved it, offering the use of his course.

Col. Halsey, spokesman for Vinson, said the Manor Club star was highly in favor of the match, while it is understood that McCarthy also liked the idea. They may clash within the next ten days.

Victor at Columbia.

Vinson won the District title at Columbia, defeating Roger Peacock, Indian Spring ace, in the semifinals, and 16-year-old Billy Dettweiler, of Congressional, in the finals. The former Mississippi champion, now working in the office of Senator Pat Harrison, won the medal in the Manor Club golf championship, but relinquished it when he returned to his home in Meridian, Miss.

McCarthy, who plays at Columbia and Beaver Dam, captured the "Champion of Champions" tournament in which club titleholders competed last Friday at Congressional with a 158 total. The reformed sand lot baseball star did himself proud in the National Amateur at Brookline this year, winning two matches before bowing to Dayton's Bob Kepler in the third round. McCarthy also took the invitation title at Beaver Dam.

Miss Betty Garber, young municipal golfer, pulled the unexpected yesterday by defeating Mrs. Florence Godfrey, 3 and 2, in the finals of the women's division of the Rock Creek turkey tournament. Driving shots that were well over 200 yards, and pitching brilliantly, Miss Garber took a 2-up lead at the turn, refusing to surrender her advantage.

The semifinals match between Pat Axtell and Harold Bowers failed to materialize due to Bowers' illness. Claude Rippy stands ready to meet the winner for the title, but there were reports that Bowers might not be able to play.

John (Squirrel) Charles entered the second-flight finals by defeating Jerry Collins in a 19-hole match. Charles shot a 73 for the 18, to Collins' 74. Charles will meet Bob Marks in the finals.

Some 25 golfers yesterday turned in scores for the Thanksgiving blind bogey tournament at Anacostia's course. The tournament will be held throughout the week, with turkeys to be awarded as prizes Sunday night. The entrance fee is 50 cents, and each golfer may turn in his medal score with any handicap he desires.

Turkey tournaments will be held at a number of golf clubs over the week-end. George Diffenbaugh is holding one at Indian Spring, and Gene Larkin one at Woodmont.

Sandy Armour, former Congressional pro, is spending a few days in town, awaiting the return of his brother, Tommy, from Dayton, Ohio. Armour shot a 73 Sunday at Congressional.

Definitely back on his game after having been forced to play one-handed for nearly two months, Roland Mackenzie shot a 73, one above par, yesterday at his home course. He negotiated the incoming nine in 35. If he continues this good shooting, Mackenzie plans to journey to Florida next month to take in a couple of big tournaments, particularly the $10,000 Miami Biltmore classic.

Kenwood Member Rolls Own; Saves Money, Gets Sore Arm

By Dave Herman.

DID you ever see a golf bag walking?

Well, Kenwood Golf and Country Club golfers are seeing it daily at their course.

George Richards, member of the club, believing that caddies are an expensive proposition for anyone who likes to play 36 holes a day and then some, has equipped his golf bag with kiddy kar wheels, a stand, and is rolling his own these days.

This novel device has created somewhat of a furore at the club, particularly among the caddies, who are having a tough time these bleak November days earning a greenback for toting the bags for 18 holes.

Richards paraded out his streamlined, knee action golf bag a few weeks ago, and already has put the idea into the heads of other veteran golfers at the club. He said the gadgets and two wheels cost him approximately 70 cents. It took him two hours to assemble.

The device has its advantages and disadvantages, according to Richards. Naturally, he saves caddy fee, but his arm, he admits becomes sore from the 18 holes of pulling.

"I've worn out the right side of my pants near the pocket," he remarked.

C. U. to Face Top Scorer Saturday

Will Seek to Stop Strutt, of Duquesne, Halted Only Twice.

LIFE for Catholic University gridmen seems to be just one leading scorer after another.

Two weeks ago the Cardinals were being primed to stop Bill Shepherd, of Western Maryland, the Nation's second most prolific pointgetter and as sweet a half back as ever kicked an opponent on the shins. Well, Dutch Bergman's boys stopped him, although they, too, were stopped, 2-0, when one of Tom Oliver's punts was stopped before it had fairly started, by a burly Terror back.

Now, Art Strutt, Duquesne full back, and leading scorer in the Nation, has netted the fat total of 102 points for the Dukes, and, if you recall, Catholic will finish its football season against Duquesne this week.

Stopped Only Twice.

The Redbirds must stop a lad who has been stopped only twice this season—by West Virginia and Carnegie Tech. A big, powerful man, with the speed of Mercury, Shepherd trails him in scoring by a mere 2 points, and, with a prospective fight for the championship in view, Strutt can be depended on to exert every effort for more points this Saturday.

Bergman believes the Brooklanders will bottle up Strutt. He pointed out that Shepherd found it not difficult to gain between the 20-yard lines, but was impotent when touchdowns were within reaching distance.

Banks on Makofski.

The Catholic mentor thinks Pittsburgh fans may see a pretty good scorer in Bob Makofski, his sophomore half back, who slipped into eighth place in the national standing with four touchdowns for a total of 56. Makofski, naturally, has not been called upon to face opponents of the caliber that Strutt has, but he has risen to every occasion, met every demand.

For eight C. U. men it will be the last game of their collegiate careers. Gene Augusterfer, Tom Oliver, Ed Thibodeau and Rosenfield.

Montgomery Will Forego State Play

Coaches, Principals Vote Against County Soccer Representation.

COACHES and principals representing the seven Montgomery County High Schools met in Rockville yesterday to select a team to play in the State soccer tourney and by a surprising vote of 12-to-2, decided to abolish county representation.

Theleague plan among the county schools was abandoned with the completion of the basket ball season lastyear and the past soccer season Gaithersburg High winning the mythical title.

Advocated By Broome.

Superintendent of Schools Edwin W. Broome advocated the scheduling of games by invitation only, dropping the league idea for reasons that have promoted the anything but the best of feeling amoung the county schools.

The county winners will compete in the State track meet as usual in the spring.

The question of football supplanting soccer was discussed but no action was taken and the question was set aside until the athletic board convenes again before the Christmas holidays.

Baltimoreans Challenge.

The MsCormick A. C., of Baltimore, would like to arrange games with unlimited basket ball teams in Washington having gymnasiums. A challenge has been issued to Sholl's. Former college players are on the team. Managers interested should write Jerry Pivec, 2412 East Madison street, Baltimore.

THE waning high school football season finds Eastern High bowing out today in its annual game with Washington-Lee at Eastern Stadium. The contest will start at 3 p. m. It was originally scheduled for Friday, but was moved up three days.

Western High, Gonzaga, Landon, Friends, St. Alban's, Alexandria and Episcopal all conclude their schedules this week. The Western-Gonzaga game on Friday marks the renewal of a rivalry extending back well over a decade. The teams fought to a 12-12 tie last year.

To Play Hagerstown.

St. Alban's journeys over Hagerstown way on Saturday to end its successful season against St. James; Landon and Friends resume their annual dispute Friday at Landon; at Alexandria, Friday, Alexandria High faces Fredericksburg, coached by Johnnie Fenlon, former George Washington backfield ace, and Episcopal High travels to Orange, Va., to play Woodbury Forest.

Central High takes a trip to Petersburg, Va., Friday in its next-to-the-last game of the season. The Coggins crew ends its campaign, December 1, in Columbia, S. C., where it plays Columbia High.

In facing Eastern today, Washington-Lee will be playing its third game with a Washington high school this season. The Ballston boys were nosed out by Central, 7 to 6, but fell last Friday before Western, 13 to 0. They also hold a 6-0 win over Gonzaga which beat Eastern.

All but two Eastern gridders com plete their career today. William (Speed) Bullough, end; Ray Wiersham and Jim Carroll, guards; Dick Absher, tackle; Johnnie Carvelas, center; Wad Wood, end; Bob Hart, Frank Principe, Glen Shaw and Bernie Cooper, backs, and Neal McKinner, sub end, are all Seniors. Absher was All-High tackle on The Post team. Charlie Kidwell, half back, and Dick Brand, end, have another year.

Eastern, the most inconsistent team of the locality, is aching to redeem itself after losing to Gonzaga. Despite the known power of the Purple, Eastern was hardly expected to lose after having tied Tech and Western.

Generals Lay Off Until Thanksgiving

Lexington, Va., Nov. 19 (AP).—Coming out of Saturday's scrap with William and Mary without injuries of consequence, the Washington and Lee team was given a complete rest today. The first of four practice sessions planned for this week will be held tomorrow.

New Chest Agency To Open on Jan. 1

Will Pass Applications for Clinical Treatment.

The Central Admitting Bureau of the Community Chest, which will pass upon applicants for hospital or clinical service at reduced charges or without fee, will open about January 1, according to an announcement made yesterday by the Medical Society of the District, which is cooperating in the project

Applicants seeking free medical treatment—other than emergency cases—will obtain cards from the bureau after investigation of their financial condition. Direct application may be made to the Community Chest or a patient may be referred by a private physician or hospital clinic.

Physicians and Chest officials expect to effect economies by this new system that will extend medical service in Washington over a wider field than is now possible.

To Honor College President.

The Massachusetts State College Alumni Club will hold a luncheon today at the Harrington Hotel at 12:30 p. m. in honor of Dr. Hugh P. Baker, president of the college; Dr. Fred J. Sievers, director of the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, and Miss Edna Skinner, advisor of women.

History to Remember Olin, Good or Bad, and Not Critics

By Jimmy Powers
(Pinch Hitting for Paul Gallico).

NEW YORK, Nov. 19 (Spl.).—The new light-heavyweight champion of the world is a young Hebrew named Bob Olin. When the announcer, florid of face and hoarse, stood in the ring and shouted the news of his victory last Friday night, Olin, who had been standing meekly, came out of his corner. The blazing lights brought his lumpy features into harsh relief. Permanent welts have grown up about his cheek bones and forehead pushing his small, bluish-black eyes deep into his skull. But these queer eyes flamed with the sudden, raucous verdict.

Olin skipped out like a delighted puppy, his long-sleeved white robe flapping about his shins, his bruised lips split in an ingratiating grin.

Then, as I remember, some one booed loudly; a few cheered; a low, inconsequential murmur came out of the emptying gallery. Olin come up with a shock. His eyes darted about questioningly. Then the film of expression changed, registered bewilderment, pain, disillusion.

Later he came clumsily down the ring steps and shouldered his way through the backs of callous patrons already leaving to top off a night's pleasure. As he swept by us in the press trenches, wet of scalp and panting, mumbling pardons for his hasty progress, we caught another glimpse of his battered face. It had the pitiful expression of a man who distrusts his ears, his very world.

Olin was pathetic in his victory. As a boy he had broken his nose on innumerable fists, bruised his knuckles, split his lips, tortured his ribs in a drab and painful preparation for this night of triumph. Maybe he has forgotten it all by now. His Talmud has a saying which, translated, can be made for our purpose to say that the championship makes the man. Olin, in time, will certainly come to have more pride in himself, more confidence, and, with it, more courage. Boxing experts tell me that is all he lacks.

I would like to console the new champion with the reminder that every man lives on his own account. It is a miserable existence which depends entirely on what other people think. The insides of the hooting heads of dissenting voters in the mezzanine are certainly wretched homes for Olin's true happiness.

If the young Brooklyn Jew will walk into the ring again with his chin up and his strange, slow eyes shining, he will be amazed at his reception. After all he is the champion of the world in his weight class. He won his title rightfully, too, for Maxie Rosenbloom, whom he deposed, the whole night did not strike one manly, harmful or legal blow. Olin can, and certainly will try to improve. Perhaps it was for the best that he won in such unhappy fashion. He might otherwise have found himself suddenly giddy on heights he was never meant to climb.

There have been comparatively great men in Olin's class, Levinsky, McTigue, Greb, Tunney, Loughran, Delaney and Berlenbach. But time will weaken and disfigure the entire list into a blur. Some distant day some one will stage a fight. There will be silver-papered programs, no doubt, and gold tassels, too. Men and women, strangers to us all, will idly finger the pages. There they will come upon Olin's name. It will be neither smaller nor larger than the others. When the bank president, the precinct captain, the physician, the truck driver and all the rest of those who booed him last Friday have been long asleep and forgotten then Olin will live again, an honorable soldier of an honored legion. He will stand forever under that mythical arch, that sonorous, swelling phrase that is almost a poem—"Champion of the World."

Shotton, Ex-Manager, Dropped as Reds Coach

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 19 (AP).—Bert Shotton, former manager of the Cincinnati Reds, was dropped as coach today, the management announced, adding that Tom Sheehan, pitcher last season for Hollywood in the Pacific Coast League, and George Kelly had been signed as coaches. Kelly is a former big league first baseman.

Kelly, Sheehan and Manager Dressen of the Reds formerly were teammates on the Cincinnati Club.

Alabama Team Challenged By Huey

Charges Tide With Set-Up Schedule; Declares It's Third Rate.

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 19 (AP). Senator Huey P. Long today threw down the gauntlet to Alabama's football team, "formally challenging" the Rose Bowl invitation candidates to meet Louisiana State University this year and in 1935.

"We know they had a set-up schedule this year," he declared, "but if they don't play us it will be a ridiculous thing next year—something like a fighter who doesn't want to fight anybody.

Seems Funny, He Says.

"I see where they're after a bid to the Rose Bowl. Well, we're not after any Rose Bowl bid, but it seems funny they didn't want to play anybody else but want to play out there."

The Senator, hoarse from a cold, paused a minute and then continued:

"Alabama's third rate. Everybody knows that Louisiana State or Tulane, either, could lick 'em, and that they've been dodging both for years.

"This is a formal challenge to them."

Colonials Open Drills for Nodaks

Are on Threshold of Most Successful Season Under Pixlee.

STANDING on the threshold of its most successful season since Jim Pixlee assumed control of its gridiron destinies, George Washington yesterday launched preparations to meet the invading North Dakota eleven, which it plays Friday night at Griffith Stadium.

With five victories thus far, G. W. will equal its past performances record by whipping the Nodaks, then it can look to Oklahoma for the game that, if won, will make it the most successful season in the matter of games won and lost in five years.

The visitors arrive at 6:30 p. m. today, and will be quartered at the New Colonial Hotel. Tomorrow and Thursday they are scheduled to practice at Griffith Stadium, though not in company with George Washington.

Beat St. Thomas.

Coach Jack West's men defeated St. Thomas Sunday, 2-0, maintaining their fine record for intersectional warfare. The team, incidentally, is one of the most widely traveled in the Nation. It has been from coast to coast, from the Gulf to the Canadian boundary.

West led the team to five consecutive North Central Conference championships, including this year's race, after winning three at South Dakota State, where he coached immediately after graduating from Coe.

Friday's game will be the third between G. W. and its guest. They battled to a 6-6 tie in 1931, after South Dakota had tied Oregon in one of the season's greatest upsets. Last year the Colonials won, 27-6.

Alexandria's Eleven Hard At Work

Coach Given Driving His Men for Clash With Fredericksburg.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 19 (Spl.).—A lengthy scrimmage was held by Alexandria High's grid warriors today in preparation for next Friday's titular tilt with the Fredericksburg High School. When darkness finally forced the drill to be discontinued, Coach Givens held a skull drill in the locker room.

Givens is taking no chances of the squad letting down just before the final games, as has been the case in preceding seasons. No basketball aspirants on the football squad will be allowed to practice the indoor sport before the football schedules is completed on Thanksgiving Day.

As Johnny Fenlon, former George Washington University luminary, is coaching Fredericksburg, local experts are looking for an attack similar to Pixlee's, but with more variations and trickier.

The first game in the series to decide the 150-pound championship of Alexandria will be played next Sunday, with the Pirates, defending champions, playing the St. Ritas. This contest will be staged on Hunton Field, as Baggett's Stadium has been leased to the Washington Yellow Jackets.

The winner will meet the Virginia A. C. at Baggett's Stadium, later on in the season.

Smarting under their defeat at the hands of the Clancy A. C., the Alexandria Fraters buckle down to to serious practice Tuesday night, in order to be in tip-top shape for the Washington Federals, whom they meet next Sunday at Griffith Stadium. The Fraters will attempt to redeem themselves in the eyes of local fans, as the loss of Clancy knocked them right out of the running for the State championship, which they have held for the past two seasons.

Although defeated by a 16-to-0 score, the Fraters were by no means overwhelmed in the Norfolk game.

With the possible exception of Parke Bell, flashy end, all of the injured members will have recovered sufficiently to perform in next Sunday's game.

Warburton Up To Old Trick Too Late

Ran Oregon 'Ragged' With Great Punt Returns; Vindicates Jones.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 19 (AP). Little man, what now?

Irvine Warburton, 145-pound Southern California quarter back, inspired this question from the West's fanatics today.

For the Scooter, ill-betided all season after earning All-American laurels a year ago, broke loose again in all his glory Saturday at the expense of Oregon.

True, he gained only 17 yards in scrimmage. Wisely he kept the Webfoots looking for him and instead gave the ball to others who rode for long gains on the deception.

Back at Old Trick.

But he was back at his old trick of nullifying his opponents' kicks with sensational returns. The first kick he caught in the game was returned 37 yards, almost to the point from which it was booted. Twice he reversed his field in that run. A few minutes later he returned another 37 yards, two yards beyond the place where it had been kicked, but a teammate was offside.

In the third period he was chased 51 yards with a kickoff before he was nailed.

This wasn't all. The cotton-thatched lad who saw his All-American mansion crumble about him this year because of ineffective blocking, interference and a leg injury, threw passes as he never threw them in his sensational 1933 parade to national honors.

Four Passes Good.

Four times he threw the ball. All were strikes.

Warburton's performance had the earmarks of a comeback—too late. The chances are 100 to 1 he won't be an All-American.

His failure this year caused the tongues to wag. All manner of things were said about him.

Only Coach Howard Jones stood by him.

"He's greater than ever before," said Troy's head man.

Through Hill and Dale With the Nimrods . . .

By M. W. Meier.

IT IS gorgeous out in the fields these days, but the Indian summer weather is making it hard for bird dogs. It is so dry they almost have to pick a quail up and dust it off before they can smell it.

In the last few days we've seen more than one stanch animal run through coveys and catch the scent a flash too late. This isn't the dog's fault—it's a lack of rain.

Turkey hunters are especially lamenting the dearth of one or two good showers. Of all our acquaintances who have sought gobblers since the season opened, not one has reported success. Quail shooters likewise have been handicapped, but nearly every one is managing to bag a few birds.

Make Fine Haul.

One of the best mixed bags reported on opening day was that of Dr. Madden and his friend, Edward Roach. They brought in 22 quail, 8 rabbits, 1 dove and a 'possum. The Walter Bowling farm, near Newport, Md., was the scene of their hunt. Last Saturday the same pair of nimrods garnered in 3 woodcock and 10 quail within a short distance of the University of Maryland.

Capt. George L. Evans, of the District of Columbia National Guard, is another shooter who has been bagging woodcock the last few days in addition to quil. Capt. Evans shoots over a stanch little red dog whose field work is a joy to watch.

Duck Violators Flee.

Heavy, heavy hangs over the heads of the two duck shooters who outran Federal Game Management Agents Wallace and Boswell on the Susquehanna Flats last week.

The men left behind them an illegal bag consisting of 86 ducks—45 scaup, 39 canvasbcak and 2 redhead—and then, as the pursuit became too hot, they flung down their guns and their hunting coats, all of which the agents seized.

In the pockets of the hunting coats were the violator's licenses, so the Biological Survey found it no problem as to whose names to fill in on the warrants. With ducks so scarce this year, the men probably will get little sympathy from the Federal judge who hears their case.

Postmaster William Mooney—and may his tribe increase—leaves this week-end on his annual turkey hunt down in Albermarle County, Va. With him goes the hunting companion of many years, W. R. David.

Their destination is somewhat of a secret, but we imagine it is the same place that Mr. Mooney took Theodore Roosevelt to, years and years ago, for his first Virginia turkey-shoot. Roosevelt was so pleased with the section that he built a little shooting lodge down there, called Pine Knot. It still stands.

With Mooney and David will be the guide who has so often been acclaimed Virginia's best turkey "yelper," old Jim Bishop. What reminiscences those two probably have to recall on their annual hunting trips.

Bad Shooting Form.

It is considered very bad form to shoot rabbit over a bird dog, and in years gone by we have been tense spectators at hunting field arguments where hasty guests have taken advantage of their host's dogs' momentary idiosyncracy.

If you want to shoot rabbit, get a hound or else a springer spaniel. Don't ruin a bird dog.

It is easy to teach a bird dog stanchness on point—provided you teach him when he is young.

Catch him when he makes his first point. Get squarely behind him and pull his tail straight out. Use the left hand for this and with the right one stroke him toward the back with a soothing, ruffling motion. Keep saying, "Steady, Boy!"

After ruffling his hair for a bit, release the tail and put a hand on either hind quarter. Shove him forward, all the while commanding him to be steady.

Resist Every Attempt.

You will find that he resists every attempt to push him ahead. He will dig his toes into the ground and refuse to budge. Do this for a little while and then walk past him and flush the birds.

Do this on two or three points and you should have a dog that will forever be stanch. Should he flush when you walk past him you may have to employ a check cord and get the assistance of a friend.

Bird dogs point because of the sensatory pleasure they derive from stiffening their body. By ruffling their hair you enhance this pleasure and help them to stay rigid.

Stocks Prolong Hesitant Mood As Sales Drop

Prices Dip Slightly on Smaller Turnover of 982,950 Shares.

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—Movements in stocks continued to show contrasts today, prolonging the hesitant course set last week.

For the third straight session, utility shares on the average sagged to new low levels for the year as the market reacted to President Roosevelt's week-end statements on power development by the Federal Government.

Pressure on American telephone lifted, however, and the stock recovered nearly 2 points of its severe losses last week.

Demand for industrials, particularly steel shares, gave the list a mixed appearance. A number of issues in that sector finished with moderate gains.

Stock Averages Slip.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks continued to slip, losing three-tenths of a point at 72.3. Trading was less active. Turnover totaled 982,950 shares against 1,032,170 Friday.

An additional small gain in steel operations buoyed hopes for an extension of recent gains in business. Moves for cooperation between private business and the administration along the recovery front were a leading source of such hopes.

But speculative action was conducted cautiously as traders waited for the power stocks to find firm ground and for the market to resume its recently interrupted upward trend.

Inclined to Mark Time.

Elsewhere along the financial front a disposition to mark time also was in evidence.

A further modest recovery in European gold currencies expressed the relief of the foreign exchange market at the passing of the latest political, crisis in some of the gold bloc countries. Most of the important power stocks sold at the lowest prices recorded this year or longer. Public Service of New Jersey touched 26 and finished off 1⅝. Consolidated gas fell to within a fraction of 21.

Among isolated issues finishing 1 to 2 points higher were Allied Chemical, Radio preferred B, Baldwin Locomotive preferred, Brooklyn-Manhattan-Transit, Bullard, General Refractories, Hercules Powder, International Business Machines, Reynolds Spring and Union Pacific.

Du Pont responded with a minor gain to announcement of an extra dividend of 15 cents a share on the common. Farm equipments did better, both Deere and International Harvester rallying for net gains of more than a point.

Renewed Public Utilities Liquidation Is Laid to Fear of Government Agency Competition, Observer Charges.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York, Nov. 19.—The conviction that the public utility industry will continue to be an exception to the current "swing to the right," which many observers discern in Administration policies, and that this industry will be subjected to further "unfair competition" from Government agencies, explains the recently renewed liquidation of public utility securities.

A number of public utility securities are now quoted at new low levels for the depression. This is true not only of stocks of overcapitalized holding companies, but also of many of the more conservative operating companies as well.

The factor most largely responsible for the undermining of investors' confidence in public utility securities has been the "yardstick" experiment of the Administration in the Tennessee Valley. President Roosevelt's background in the public industry was gained in New York State, where he had been engaged in several battles with the utilities while Governor. The Insull collapse, which preceded his entry into office in Washington tended to confirm his views that the public utilities, protected by their position as legal monopolies, were charging excessive rates and failing to serve the public in a reasonable manner. Hence, the TVA was launched as a model of what the Federal Government could do to make power cheaper.

President Wendell L. Willkie of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, which is most directly affected by the "yardstick" experiment, recently told an audience in Birmingham just why the utilities regard that experiment as unfair to them. The Government, in establishing the rates to be charged by the TVA, is writing down the valuation of the Muscle Shoals power plant, which cost $60,000,000 to build, to approximately $20,000,000. The TVA is to pay ultimately, as its sole tax, 5 per cent of the gross proceeds received by it from the sale of power.

TVA Enjoys Concessions On Freight and Interest.

On a kilowatt-hour basis, this would be 13 1-3 per cent of the taxes paid by the Alabama Power Co., Commonwealth and Southern subsidiary. The TVA enjoys concessions on freight rates as well as artificially low interest rates through use of the Government credit. Finally, and perhaps most significantly, the Public Works Administration is lending money to municipalities to build their own transmission and distribution systems for the sale of TVA power at 4 per cent interest, and is giving these municipalities an outright grant of 30 per cent of the labor and materials used.

Mr. Willkie estimates that the Alabama Power Co. could actually afford to establish rates 30 per cent below the famous scale announced by the TVA on domestic and commercial power, and 16 per cent on industrial power, if it were given the same artificial advantages.

While the utility industry is virtually unanimous in regarding TVA methods as an example of "unfair competiiton," nevertheless several far-seeing executives see a silver lining in what appears to be a very black cloud indeed that overhangs their industry.

The fundamental factor in the drastic decline in utility securities has not been actual Government competition in the Tennessee Valley, or threatened competition elsewhere, but rather the effect on valuations of the severe deflation in commodity prices since 1929. Under our system of regulation, public utilities are entitled to earn a fair return upon a fair valuation of their property. After the war, the industry waged a legal battle to induce the courts to order State regulatory commissions to value their properties chiefly on the basis of present-day, rather than original cost.

The Supreme Court upheld this contention, as a result of which there was a virtual breakdown of effective State regulation in many cases. Valuations were raised to higher levels based on the great price rise of the war period, making possible the write-ups disclosed in the Federal Trade Commission's financial investigation of the industry. Since a large part of the capitalization of public utility operating companies was in the form of bonds and preferred stocks with fixed rates of return, the higher valuations magnified several-fold the income which could be earned by public utility common stocks.

Valuations of Post-War Era May Be Open to Attack.

Now that the general price level has come down again, valuations which reflected the prices of the post-war decade are vulnerable to attack. "Yardstick" projects like that in the Tennessee Valley, investigations like that just completed by the New York Power Authority, which favored a reduction in the average basic power rate for domestic consumers from 6 cents to 3½ cents per kilowatt-hour, and like that which the Federal Communications Commission is launching in the telephone field, would have been much less effective if the commodity price level had not fallen.

The salvation of the industry, therefore, may ultimately be greatly increased volume at lower rates, especially if the credit of the conservative operating companies is not injured by current Government policies. If the Federal Government and the municipalities can be kept out of further entry into the power business, even if this means deeper rate cuts now than are justified by existing generation and distribution costs, several progressive executives believe that a basis will have been laid for a new era of expansion and financial stability for the industry when the present wave of anti-utility feeling will have passed.

Bond Market Sags Fraction In Quiet Sales

Industrials Are Firm as Trading Volume Sinks to $12,388,000.

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—The bond market displayed a somewhat irregular tone today, although the majority of prices fluctuated narrowly.

Various industrials were fairly firm, in sympathy with their stocks, but the rails were hesitant and a few of the utilities continued to reflect the recent attack on rates.

President Roosevelt's Tennessee Valley speeches also provided little cheer for the followers of the utility division.

Trading Is Quiet.

Trading was rather quiet. Transfers totaled $12,388,000, par value, against $14,145,000 last Friday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was off one-tenth of a point at 84.2.

U. S. Government securities pointed upward most of the session, but closing quotations were slightly mixed. Federal Farm Mortgage and Home Owners Loan bonds eased 1-32d to 5-32ds of a point under profit taking.

Treasury 3s, 3¼s and 4s firmed 1-32d to 4-32ds. Several of the Federals were unchanged. There was a turnover in the Government group of about $3,180,000.

Scattered Firm Spots.

Scattered firm spots in the corporation divisions included Consolidated Coal 5s, up 1½ at 25; Container Corporation 5s, up 2 at 77; Baltimore & Ohio refunding 6s, up 1½ at 77; Interlake Iron 5s, up 1⅜ at 66⅞; McKesson 5½s, up 1 at 94½, and Penn-Dixie Cement 6s, up 1⅜ at 70⅞.

Among losers of fractions to around 2 points were some loans of Tennessee Electric, St. Joseph Lead, Frisco, St. Louis Southwestern, Northern States Power, N. Y., Westchester & Boston, New Haven, New Orleans Public Service, Missouri Pacific, Chicago & Northwestern, Columbia Gas, American Water Works, Consolidated Gas and American Telephone.

In the foreign department, Panama 5s came to life with a gain of 4 points at 45, a new year's high. French Republic 7s also were up 4¾ at 186¾. Obligations of Japan, Colombia and Estonia improved 1 to around 2 points. The Australians were a bit easier.

Curb's Prices Hold Steady; Utilities Off

Rising Tendencies Appear in Lists; Sales Total 177,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—Renewed weakness in utilities featured an otherwise steady curb market today.

American Gas & Electric and Electric Bond & Share showed a partial recovery after dipping to new lows for 1934. Consolidated Gas & Electric of Baltimore lost 1½ points, while Bell Telephone of Canada got down 4 on small offerings.

Some rising tendencies appeared in other parts of the list, particularly among specialties. Ohio Brass B, Lerner Stores, Mead Johnson, Pepperell Manufacturing, United States Radiator preferred and Sherwin-Williams were up 1 to 3 points. Davenport Hosiery was a weak spot, dipping 3½.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Hiram Walker and Pioneer Gold finished a bit lower, while final prices were unchanged to slightly higher in Creole Petroleum, Distiller Corporation-Seagrams, Pan American Airways, Swift & Co., Swift Internacionale, Lake Shore, International Petroleum and Wright-Hargreaves.

Transfers, which approximated 177,000 shares, were about the same as last Friday.

Rail Trend Hopeful, B. & O. Head Says

Willard Predicts Better and Cheaper Service in Future.

Baltimore, Nov. 19 (AP).—Railroads of the United States may look forward to the future hopefully, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio, told the stockholders today at their annual meeting.

Denying that the railroads constitute a "decadent industry," Willard predicted that "the railroads in the future, in cooperation with such other transportation agencies as are now or may hereafter become available, will furnish a coordinated service cheaper and better than in any other country in the world."

Higher costs of operation during the current year and the prospect of further increases in 1935 have made it necessary for the railroads to seek higher freight rates and to adopt extraordinary economies, the railroad president said in his report. He added, however, that "this burden on the carriers" will be lightened "if and when there is business activity, as we all hope for and expect."

"I can not believe that this country, with all its wealth and natural resources and man-made equipment, is destined to remain permanently on a basis of 50 per cent capacity operation," he said.

Home rails and brewery shares were also prominent, but German bonds, oil shares and transatlantic issues eased. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Prices on the bourse yesterday were depressed by the weakness of bank stocks, but rentes held their recent gains, which helped steady most of the list. The closing was heavy.

Corn Reaches New High as Wheat Drops

Cotton Sales Are Narrow and Market Closes Barely Steady.

Chicago, Nov. 19 (AP).—In the role of star performer, corn today ran up to new peak prices for the season, and ended at the topmost point reached.

Decidedly unfavorable weather for corn movement added to bullish effects of widespread belief in acute shortage of feedstuffs the remainder of the current crop year. A fresh stimulus to upturns of prices was that scarcity of domestic feedstuffs has led to extensive trucking of feed grain, duty paid, into the United States from Canada.

Corn closed strong, ⅝@1⅛ cents above Saturday's finish; May, 85⅝@85¾. Wheat, ¼ off, to ⅜ up; May, 99¾@99⅞. Oats, at ⅛ decline, to ⅝ advance, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Unwelcome rains were general throughout the corn belt, except the Southwest. Primary receipts of corn lacked volume, and arrivals of corn in Chicago today totaled but 106 cars, against 537 a year ago.

Cotton Market

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—Trading in cotton was quiet today and prices fluctuated within a range of 5 or 6 points, closing barely steady net unchanged to 1 point lower.

Southern hedging was reported a little more active than recently, but houses with Liverpool connections were fairly good buyers and prices worked up a few points during the early trading. December advanced to 12.33 and May to 12.41, or about 5 points above Saturday's close.

Demand tapered off after the close of Liverpool and prices sagged in the later trading under comparatively light offerings.

December liquidation continued largely in the form of switching from near to late months, with spot or trade interests buying the near months against sales of later deliveries.

Exports today 23,036 making 1,707,824 so far this season. Port receipts 24,541. United States port stocks 3,168,471.

Two Countries To Face World Wheat Inquiry

Argentina, France to Be Questioned on Heavy Grain Shipments.

By Albert W. Wilson.

Budapest, Hungary, Nov. 19 (AP).—Argentina and France will be called upon by the world wheat conference, opening tomorrow, to explain heavy grain shipments in recent weeks.

These shipments are blamed in some quarters for depressing world prices to a point where the Liverpool market touched a low record for the year Saturday.

The Canadian delegation expressed fears at the London meeting in August that a failure to decide quotas at that session would lead to French and Argentine "dumping," which would wipe out all improvement in world prices resulting from the American drought.

In Delicate Position.

France particularly, it was said, is in a delicate position, as she made a pledge to the conference last winter which was expected virtually to remove her from the export field.

Delegates from the major wheat countries will review operations in the last few months of the international wheat pact, designed to boost prices.

Andrew Cairns, of Canada, secretary of the wheat advisory committee, in an official report, will inform the conference that the average price for wheat in the British market the first two weeks of November, was 45 predevaluation gold cents per bushel. European countries are pledged to lower their tariffs when an average of 63 gold cents is maintained for a period of 16 weeks.

The lowest price was 38.8 cents during the month of May. It was down to 50.8 in August, 1933, when the wheat pact was signed.

Cairns will report a yearly average of 52 cents in 1932-33; 59 in 1931-32; 76 in 1930-31, and 127 in 1929 and 1930. It ranged from 123 to 182 gold cents in the preceding seven years.

Basis of Arguments.

These statistics will form the basis of arguments by North Americans and Australians that this conference must not fail to extend the pact to 1937 and reach a decision on quotas for the current years.

The two American delegates, Loyd V. Steere, agricultural attache at Berlin, and John V. A. Macmurray, minister to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, are already here. A number of other delegates arrive today.

Process Tax Ruling Favors Hog Raisers

Responsibility for Funds Due Treasury Rests With Packers.

Farmers who slaughter hogs for sale to retailers or other commercial handlers will no longer be held responsible for payment of the processing tax, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has notified Dr. T. B. Symons, director of the University of Maryland Extension Service.

Previous regulations held the farmers responsible when they sold the slaughtered hogs either to commercial concerns or to consumers.

The new regulation transfers to commercial handlers all liability for payment of the tax on hog products derived from hogs slaughtered by producers and feeders.

Dr. Symons said a producers who slaughters his own hogs and sells or exchanges directly to consumers not more than 300 pounds of the products during any marketing year is not required to pay a tax.

If the producer sells more than 300 pounds, but not more than 1,000 pounds of perk products from his own hogs direct to consumers, he is liable for the tax only on the volume sold in excess of the 300-pound exemption.

If he sells more than 1,000 pounds during any marketing year he loses his 300-pound exemption and is liable for the tax on all products derived from the hogs sold.

The amount of the tax is determined upon a live-weight basis, which is arrived at by using conversion factors prescribed in the regulations. Farms who slaughter hogs and sell hogs not their own raising are not entitled to the 300-pound exemption.

Threats Made Over Speech

Student Speaker SaysStand at "Anti-War" Rally Brought Call.

Two threats have been reported by Joseph T. Elvove, University of Maryland student who condemned the recent student "anti-war" conference, in a speech before that body in Baltimore.

Elvove said he received the first from an unidentified person who called him by telephone. He quoted the voice as saying, "We are a very militant group and plan to do something about it."

Later, he said, a friend notified him that "two or three organizations in Washington are very much perturbed over your speech because you broke up several of their plans."

The speech was made Saturday, November 10, before the conference of the National Student League and the League for Industrial Democracy at Johns Hopkins University. It was said to be representative of the sentiment of the Maryland University student body.

It condemned the gathering as "Communistic, alien-inspired and anti-American." Many letters have been received at the university from patriotic organizations, praising Elvove's action.

A dissenting note came from Rabbi Edward L. Israel of the Har Sinai Temple, Baltimore, who declared the League for Industrial Democracy was not a Communistic organization.
